The memory's a vivid one.

I was working the booth at one of my first conventions as part of the R. Talsorian Games crew when my boss, Mike Pondsmith, shoved a small, sculpted chunk of plastic in my face.

"What do you think of this?" he asked me.

I took a moment to focus on the small chunk of plastic – a gray miniature perfect in scale for placing on a TTRPG grid map – and mumbled something about it looking nice.

Mike nodded as if I was confirming his own thoughts, then went on to show the small chunk of plastic to Cody.

I'll be honest. At the time, I was so focused on doing a good job and nervous about working with gaming legends that I didn't think much about the encounter. I should have, though, because miniatures maker Monster Fight Club had created the small chunk of plastic, a fantastic cyberpunk sculpt. From that beginning, the Cyberpunk RED miniature line and, later, the Cyberpunk RED: Combat Zone miniature skirmish game grew.

Over the next year, with the ink on a licensing deal dry, Monster Fight Club created and showed us dozens upon dozens of sculpts, some based on our artwork but just as often original creations born from their imagination. And they didn't just show us the sculpts, either! They shared their packaging, with beautiful digital, full-color "paintovers" of each miniature. Those paintovers brought the miniatures to life, transforming them from small chunks of plastic into people. People with stories. Stories we on the Cyberpunk RED team found ourselves itching to tell. Who were they? What was their Lifepath like? How did they survive on the streets of Night City? Our curiosity sparked the idea for an NPC book containing biographies and stat blocks for each miniature hammered out on Monster Fight Club's forge.

A familiar idea, honestly. After all, we'd already done it once. If you're a Cyberpunk 2020 fan, you'll probably remember Edgerunners Inc, a book about an in-universe "street mercs for hire" temp firm, complete with biographies and stat blocks for Solos, Techs, Netrunners, and more to plug into your campaign. It was almost exactly what we wanted to do with the characters represented by Monster Fight Club's miniatures.

Almost.

At R. Talsorian Games, we find inspiration from the past but shape it through a lens formed by the evolution of role-playing games, the world around us, and Cyberpunk as a whole. In-world files on Night City residents made sense but Edgerunners Inc didn't. Danger Gal, though? A private investigation NeoCorp? Yeah. That hit the spot. With Infocomp dead and buried in the Corporate graveyard thanks to the 4th Corporate War, Danger Gal might well be the most significant information broker in The Time of the Red. Of course they'd have files on the factions and people of Night City. Information is power, after all, and what NeoCorp doesn't want power? And, lucky you, we're opening up Danger Gal's archives to sneak you a peek.

Enjoy the show and remember, there's no such thing as a good Corp. Even if they're fond of cat ears and anime.

USING DANGER GAL DOSSIER

GETTING THE MOST OUT OF THIS BOOK

A good GM knows there's no such thing as a generic character, especially in Cyberpunk RED. Night City's a living, breathing world brimming with people, each living their own life and telling their own story. That's what Danger Gal Dossier is: a collection of Non-Player Characters (NPCs) belonging to different factions in Night City, each with their own histories and lives – all from the viewpoint of the analysts at Danger Gal, the Dark Future's premiere private detective and security agency.

USING DANGER GAL DOSSIER

During a Cyberpunk RED campaign, your Crew will meet many people. An entire relationship could play out as a brief transaction across an Oasis counter or spin into an epic story worthy of a Rockerboy's ballads. You'll form bonds with friends, enemies, family, allies, acquaintances, lovers, rivals, and more. The NPCs you'll encounter will be many things. One thing the NPCs in your campaign should never be, though, are generic, faceless drones without a story of their own.

That's the Megacorp way of looking at people, choomba. Not the Cyberpunk way.

DATA

CP:R refers to the Cyberpunk RED core rulebook.

THE FACTIONS

Danger Gal Dossier brings to light fifteen factions in Night City. We worked hard to provide a wide selection usable in your games, ranging from Nomad Packs, Boostergangs, and Edgerunning Crews to elite Corp Squads and NCPD's finest.

DATA

For more information about Danger Gal, SEE CP:R PAGE 271.

Each faction's entry details its history, resources, goals, and base of operations; in other words, everything you need to weave the group into your own story.

THE CHARACTERS

Yeah, they've got Stat Blocks, which means you can throw them into a fight and kill them. The NPCs in this book, however, are more than just numbers. Each has history, each has goals, and each is ready for a supporting role as a Character in your campaign.

Players, grab them for your Lifepath. GMs, grab them for your plots or, better yet, save a few for when your Crew goes out partying. Those bars and clubs are full of people, and you'll find plenty in this book without needing to make up a single name.

The Characters inside each faction are listed in order of power level, from highest to lowest.

CHARACTERS AS TEMPLATES

We pay attention to what the community's saying, and we know, as useful as the Mook stat blocks from the Cyberpunk RED core rulebook are, they can feel bland after a while. What makes a Maelstrom Mook different from a Tyger Claw Mook or an NCPD Mook? How do you make a desperate fight against a Trauma Team squad swooping in to rescue your prey feel different from a shootout against a rival Edgerunning Crew looking to score the loot you already stole fair and square?

Danger Gal Dossier to the rescue! In many of the factions, we spread out the power levels, from Mook to Boss, to provide not just characters but templates for each power level.

Say your Crew needs to break into an NCPD evidence locker for less than lawful purposes. Sure, they planned the job out, but what about when things go wrong, and the cops show up?. No problem!

Head to the NCPD chapter of this book (SEE PAGE 79) and you'll find two cop Mooks ready to go: Cherub and Pitbull. You can use their stat blocks, either as is or with your chosen modifications, as a basis for the dog pile of Mooks who'll descend upon the Crew if they mess up and sound the alarm. Maybe your Edgerunners will get in and get out without causing a fuss but you'll be ready, just in case.

CREATING YOUR OWN NPCS

Or you can do it all yourself! Flip to PAGE 149 and you'll find guidelines on creating stat blocks for your own NPCs at any power level, ranging from Mooks to Bosses.

And if your Crew's filled with combat monsters, use the Hardened variation (SEE PAGE 150) for each level to add extra potency to their opponents.

THE MISSION

Last but not least, we know today's GM is busy, and we want to help you save time in planning your game.

So, check out The Incident (SEE PAGE 153), a fully playable Mission putting your Crew smack dab in a conflict between Danger Gal and... well... your Players might be reading this, so we'll clam up. GMs, read the mission for yourselves.

Players, stay away from pages 153 through 166!

We promise – you'll have more fun if you don't spoil the plot for yourselves.

READING THE CHARACTER PAGES

Here's how to read and work with the Character pages in Danger Gal Dossier.

1. The top half of each page features the Character's name, a pithy descriptive, their faction logo, a portrait, and a biography.

2. The Character's level (SEE CP:R PAGE 399), their Reputation (SEE CP:R PAGE 193) and Role(s) are listed here. Note, for Medtechs, we don't specify which pharmaceuticals they can create. We're leaving it up to the GM. Feel free to decide as the scene demands and add a few doses to their gear.

3. The Character's Seriously Wounded, Death Save, and HP values. In other words, when they're really hurt and when they die.

4. The Character's STATS. When armor plays a factor, we list the unmodified STAT first and the armor-modified STAT in parenthesis second.

5. The Character's weapons, including any attachments, and armor. When they're only carrying a single weapon, we also list their Brawling or Martial Arts Attack. Some Characters carry more than two weapons. We note additional weapons in their gear/cyberware along with ROF and damage.

6. The Character's Skill Bases (their STAT + Skill Level). The only bonus/penalty accounted for in these listings is due to armor. We do not include bonuses from Role Abilities, equipment, or cyberware because they are situational. Be sure to account for those bonuses when needed!

7. The Character's gear and cyberware. Gear is listed with ammunition first, then additional weapons and grenades, and finally additional items (including Bulletproof Shields). Gear (such as Smart Glasses) and cyberware (such as a Cybereye) with slots includes any attached options in the listing instead of as a separate item. When a Character has two or more of the same item/cyberware (including installed options) it is listed as x#.

A GLOSSARY OF TERMS

Due to limited space, we used a few shorthand terms when filling out stat blocks in Danger Gal Dossier.

Armor and Ammo: L stands for Light, M stands for Medium, H stands for Heavy, VH stands for Very Heavy.

Quality: Poor Quality is abbreviated as PQ. Excellent Quality is abbreviated as EQ. Standard Quality is the default and not noted.

TUp: The item has been upgraded by a Tech. For Armor, the upgrade is usually either a +1 SP or a -1 reduction to the REF/DEX/MOVE penalty. In most other cases, the specific upgrade is explained in parenthesis.

Maker Specialties: Field Expertise is abbreviated to Field Exp. Upgrade Expertise is abbreviated to Up Exp. Fabrication Expertise is abbreviated to Fab Exp. Invention Expertise is abbreviated to Inv Exp.

Medicine Specialties: Medical Tech (Pharmaceuticals) is abbreviated to MedTech (Pharm). Medical Tech (Cryosystem Operation) is abbreviated to MedTech (Cyro). When a Medtech possesses both specialties they're listed as MedTech (Pharm) # • (Cryo) #.

DATA

Most of the gear used in this book comes from the Cyberpunk RED core rulebook, but not all.

If you don't recognize the name of a weapon, piece of gear, or cyberware in a stat block, check the New Items section ON PAGE 143 for more information.

Emergency Protocol Appleseed

From: Tag Ophelia Nist
To: Danger Gal Analyst Team NC-1

That's right. I'm calling Appleseed. This is not a drill! I need you to wake up. Shake off the cobwebs. Chug some Koff Pop or Triti-Fizz and come down to the office! All holidays are canceled. All leave is suspended. If you're freelance, consider yourself on the payroll until this crisis passes.

Everything you're about to read is privileged information.

Last night, a crew of six Edgerunners managed to infiltrate Danger Gal HQ. In fact, they made it all the way to the archive room. Luckily, Puma Squad agents Mouse and Pantera decided the archive room was a better assignation point than their own quarters. No, I don't know why, and it isn't my job to discipline them for slammin' in a top-secret facility. The critical thing is Puma Squad engaged and won the day. Except for the two who escaped. Not our problem, though.

We've contracted a crew to track down the remaining infiltrators and figure out the how and the why so don't worry about the break-in. Our job, sent down to us straight from Michiko Sanderson herself, is to ensure the integrity of Danger Gal's person-of-interest dossiers. In the long run, we'll perform digital forensics on the whole lot but, in the short run, we're going with a spot check, starting with the latest data. To that end, I've randomly pulled reports turned in during the past month. Analyze the files. Compare them to your memories and notes. Make sure nothing's changed. If so much as a word is wrong, we need to know! It doesn't look like the infiltrators downloaded from, uploaded to, or accessed the dossiers, but CEO Sanderson insists on being thorough, and she's the boss. If it helps, she's working on this with us, checking one of her reports, so she'll be doing the work, too, on top of all her other duties.

I know this sucks, but I also know you'll do this right. You're the best of the best or you wouldn't be here.

Make me proud.

6TH STREET

Prepared by Cornelius Wright (Formerly Hellraiser of 6th Street)

Fuck! Tag, I told you I didn't want this one. I'm too close to the subject! Fine. You're paying my bills. Here we go.

6th Street are veterans. Some folks call them guardians, protectors, and nightmares-in-chrome, but let's call them what they are: a gang. A deputized gang utilizing a loose military rank structure inherited from their time in the War, dispensing "justice" and protecting "everyone" who follows the "law."

The founder of 6th Street, X (aka Colonel Solomon Wright), a Black ex-military Intelligence Officer, refers to the gang as an "organization" to grant them some legitimacy. When making operational decisions, they use a 3-'I's principle of leadership: Investigations (detectives), Impact (troopers), and Internal (management). If 2/3rds of the 'I's disagree with X on a command-staff vote, they overrule them.

Base of Operations

A sprawling, nine-story, retrofitted National Guard armory in North Heywood. Their base has a vehicle bay, weapon lockers, military-level comms and security, and one of the sublevels is even a fallout shelter. So essentially, anyone in the basement could survive a nuke.

It was built in the 1950s, rebuilt in the late 1990s, and then rebuilt again just before the 4th Corporate War broke out. It is a hangout, Forward Operations Base (FOB), and business center. The first floor is primarily for public relations, meetings, and customer service. The second floor is dedicated to R&R, sleeping quarters for lower-ranking members, and a canteen. The senior staff offices are on the top floor and the roof has a landing pad. The other floors currently remain a mystery.

Recent History

Recently deputized as a private law enforcement contractor, 6th Street patrols North Heywood's streets in regular shifts, on foot and on motorcycles, in groups of four to six. A Forward Operating Base rapid-response team is always ready to back up the patrols in their heavily armored vehicles, bought from the Nomads.

Resources

This is a tricky one. 6th Street is well-funded, supplied, and armed by various short-term Corporate and government contracts. In addition, they acquired a "policing" contract as deputized, private law enforcement in North Heywood. Their primary unit for law enforcement is the Davis Squad; named after legendary US Brigadier General Benjamin Oliver Davis Senior.

It's rumored X blackmailed various Corporate Execs (we've got some leads but are still figuring out which ones) to help with funding back when 6th Street got started. While initially a lucrative strategy, those Execs have died off (natural or unnatural causes) or the Corps have plugged their holes. Based on how much they're spending to compete with bigger private contractors like Militech and Lazarus, current projections indicate 6th Street's cash flow will hit a rough patch within the next three to five years. Their high ideals are likely to be compromised or abandoned if this is not resolved. They've already taken to selling property "confiscated" in the course of their duties in order to bring in more money.

6th Street currently has a good working relationship with the Nomads. This is likely to change as North Heywood becomes more gentrified and the gap between it and the Nomad-occupied Santo Domingo increases.

Note: X has mandated operatives must update their list of cyberware monthly. If they are too heavily cybered, they are released from service – likely from fear of a gang member going cyberpsycho on a civilian.

Goals

6th Street dreams of expanding its protection from North Heywood to all of Night City and replacing the corrupt NCPD. They have the funds, equipment, and drive, but lack the numbers. X also has a dream, no matter how unrealistic, of reuniting Night City with the United States.

DATA

North Heywood is the northern half of the region known as Heywood/Santo Domingo. For more information, SEE CP:R PAGE 299.

ARBITER

Squad Leader

Arbiter, X's son, is the leader of the 6th Street Davis Squad; some say it's nepotism as he's not a veteran. That is, until they see him in action. While he hasn't fought in any wars, he grew up with 6th Street, living under the tutelage of hundreds of veterans over the last two decades, learning a myriad of military skills.

First and foremost, he's a sniper. Possibly one of the best snipers in Night City. During his first mission, a Raffen Shiv Pack assaulted his squad's extraction site, a tenement building over 800 m/yds away from his sniper's perch.

A spotter conveyed target locations while Arbiter dispatched the enemy, taking advantage of the crumbling building and numerous exposed locations to decimate the enemy with head shot after head shot.

Arbiter's constant joking and chatter hides tactical thinking focused primarily on team cohesion. Part of this rationality is that, as a sniper, he's rarely in the thick of a fight with the others and so he ensures situational awareness through conversational banter.

When not on patrol, he can be found in the maintenance bay working on his sniper rifle, Lucille.

COLDFIRE

Action Heroine

We've confirmed the 6th Street operative known as Coldfire fought on the "wrong" side of the 4th Corporate War. She's the daughter of some middle management at Arasaka who fled to Japan during the War but she stayed behind and went dark in the aftermath. She resurfaced as Coldfire roughly a decade ago. These days, she doesn't talk about her ties to the Arasaka Corporation, nor have we been able to ascertain just how active those ties are. In other words, we can't confirm if she's an active Arasaka agent. We also aren't certain who at 6th Street knows about her past or why she's hiding in a group known to actively despise Arasaka. I figure the boss has her flagged for assassination, just in case.

In battle, Coldfire is a goddamn action heroine! During the War, she charged a Militech transport full of troops armed only with an assault rifle and a grenade. In seconds both drivers, the turret gunner, and rear guard were dead. Then she dropped the grenade into the sealed troop transport, killing everyone inside. Since joining 6th Street, she has acted as the spear during their attacks, charging forward and firing.

I recall Coldfire having several contacts and friendlies in the Heywood area from my time with the gang. When off duty, she can be found shooting pool and drinking with the squad in the 6th Street saloon, The Captain's Cup.

BREACHER

Ground Leader

Breacher was a former pro-boxer from Mexico City before the 4th Corporation War turned them into a soldier. They were, in fact, on a global tour when the fighting erupted, and their manager died during one of the early attacks.

I've included an excerpt about the moment from their self-published book: "Miguel lay in a pool of ever-increasing red as he bled out. He looked up at me with his last breath and whispered... 'Fuck Arasaka!' Then died. I took those words on as my motto to the end of the line."

I can't verify if the above actually happened, but if it did, it could create tension between Coldfire (SEE PAGE 11) and Breacher.

As second in command of the Davis Squad, Breacher is always in the heat of the battle with the team. Reporting indicates them to be a highly skilled covert operative with extensive close combat expertise in small arms, melee weapons, and boxing.

They've been known to order the entire team to hang back while they sneak into a location either to plant explosives or provide a tactical advantage via recon.

When not on duty, Breacher lives at the 6th Street headquarters with their partner, a member of the investigation unit.

KNOCK!KNOCK!

Veteran in His Sunset Years

The oldest member of Davis Squad, Knock!Knock! fought in all four Corporate Wars but gets slower every decade. Their knowledge of Corporate War history is staggering, even if their skill set is focused solely on close-range combat. Some attribute their survival to skill and others to pure luck, but either way, even to this day they still come out of most battles with minimal injuries.

We haven't been able to locate or retrieve most of Knock!Knock!'s war records, and they've never unmasked while being recorded. So, most of this intelligence is derived from ad-hoc interviews with witnesses and people they've interacted with while on patrol. We know Knock!Knock! is patient and places civilian lives above those of their team, having stopped during a firefight to perform first aid on a gunshot victim on one occasion and giving up a suspect chase to knock bystanders out of the way of a runaway vehicle.

When not on patrol Knock!Knock! doesn't stay around the headquarters and seems to view being in the gang as a job, not a calling. They are paid in cash directly after each mission. My analysis concludes that is due to the loss they've seen during their long service career; they are suffering some kind of detachment disorder, likely as a form of subconscious self-care.

ROOF DIVER

Squad Member

A native BosWasher who served in the War with little fanfare. Like so many veterans of the 4th Corporate War, they came back to no support structure or post-employment benefits, so they were left to their own devices to make ends meet. In the war's immediate aftermath, Roof Jumper made their way westward, working convoy security for different Nomad Packs along the way.

Once they reached Night City, they wandered at loose ends and might have met a bad fate if they hadn't caught the attention of 6th Street. The idea of returning to a military structure without returning to an actual military appealed, so they signed up.

Roof Jumper didn't have any cyberware until a few years ago while serving with Davis Squad. A squad member was knocked off the roof of a 40-story building. Thinking quickly, Roof Jumper dropped their gun and dove after their teammate. They grabbed a nearby cable with one hand and the teammate with the other. The move saved the teammate but ruined Roof Jumper's arm beyond hope of recovery. The team member paid to upgrade the destroyed limb with a cybernetic one as a thank-you.

When not on the job, Roof Jumper can be found at home with their husband, wife, and two kids living in a North Heywood tenement.

THE BOZOS

Prepared by Sandi Quarter (author of* Fears of a Clown: The Bozo Story*)

You know the story. The Bozos are Night City legends. Clown-like in appearance and attitude. A seemingly unending legion of violent, bodysculpted pranksters causing chaos and mayhem, all led by the mythical "Great Bozo".

Only they've evolved in the past year. No longer a single troupe of jesters, a civil war of clowns has led to the gang splitting up into different "circuses." Despite the internal struggles though, they continue to wreak havoc.

Base of Operations

Since Hilaria 2045, the Bozos have abandoned some of their known hideouts, leaving only a bloody red nose left behind. There's a joke shop in Little Europe some say they frequent and a compound deep in South Night City.

The main bases of the various circuses remains a mystery, although intelligence suggests they are connected to the sewers since legions of Bozos tend to pop out from beneath manhole covers during street fights.

Recent History

You've probably heard about the recent Hilaria 2045 event, where a group of supposedly fake Bozos shot up the Forlorn Hope.

Turns out, it goes deeper than just an attack on a well-known Edgerunner bar. What we were seeing were the edges of an internal civil war. In this case, one of the rebel leaders, Big Top, captured, bodysculpted, and brainwashed a bunch of scrubs and then unleashed them on the Hope. It seems this civil war isn't about clown murder but outdoing each other in the prank arena.

For example, since Hilaria 2045, several large, gift-wrapped boxes decorated with a yellow bow have been found in various locations in Night City.

It was captioned: "The Nose is split". Obviously a statement to the world by Big Top or one of the other circus leaders. Net54 was lucky. All they got was the nose and photo.

Five other boxes, carefully placed in a Day Market in Little Europe exploded, spreading clouds of synthcoke across the area, something NCPD now refers to as an "MAE" (Mass Addiction Event).

That's right. They had to come up with a new incident name for the damn thing. Estimates suggest as many as a hundred new synthcoke addicts were created on that particular day.

And with multiple Bozo circuses, all trying to outprank each other? It'll only get worse from here.

DATA

For more about the Forlorn Hope SEE CP:R PAGE 313.

Resources

Who the hell knows. The Bozos always seem to have whatever they need to pull off their sick, twisted plans – including more Bozos.

We know some Bozos join willingly but they're also known to just grab people at random and torture them until they're broken and ready to sign up.

They're never lacking for cyberware or weapons and no one knows how they get it all. One thing we do know? The synthcoke used in the MAE incident was more potent and addictive than what you can get on The Street.

DATA

You can play out the Hilaria 2045 event with one of the Screamsheet Adventures in the Cyberpunk RED Data Pack!

Goals

The goals of the Bozos change hourly. Chaotic pranks are their fingerprint and the civil war is only making it worse. Edgerunners should be wary. The Bozos are like cockroaches – they're everywhere.

BIG TOP

Scalpel-Wielding Ringleader

Let's be clear. Big Top isn't the mythical Great Bozo. In fact, he rails against the Great Bozo, calling him stale, unoriginal, and worst of all, unfunny. In Big Top's mind, the Great Bozo's the past while he's the future: louder, flashier, crueler, and "funnier". From what I can tell, he instigated the Hilaria 2045 event by biosculpting and Braindance mindwashing a group of captured civilians before letting them loose on the Forlorn Hope. He used the incident to declare the independence of his circus from the other Bozos, sparking the civil war.

To give you an idea of how depraved he is, search the Data Pool for a video he starred in. It popped up last week. I'm warning you, though, it isn't for the faint of heart. Obviously an execution vid, it shows Big Top shoving his Militech Tactical Umbrella down the throat of an unidentified Bozo and then opening it.

Big Top obviously has training as a Medtech. He's been seen operating in the streets on friend and foe alike. He uses his extra cyberarms to help "improve" his crew and to harvest his enemies parts for comedy and profit.

BLAMMO

OG Bozo

This guy is old. He was there in the early days, when the Bozos took the joke shops. He was there when they drove cars full of armed clowns into the malls. Rumor has it he came up with the poison pie bit.

Blammo isn't just a Bozo. He's a legend.

Little is known of his life before the gang. If there was one at all. NCPD's done DNA analysis on blood he's left behind on the scene three times over the last several decades and, each time, they got a match to a different name.

Despite his legend, Blammo refuses to take charge of his own circus. Instead, he acts as an instigator. Harsh and unfair, he's pushed young Bozos to greater heights of insanity, demanding they up their prank game and create some real chaos or "die and reduce the surplus population".

I wouldn't be surprised if it were his whispers in Big Top's (SEE PAGE 16) ears that started the Bozo civil war.

In a fight, Blammo uses explosives to corral enemies for the other Bozos, still taking the shot even if his own clowns are in the way.

JESTER

Bouncing Bozo Beauty

Jade Sky was once one of the greatest acrobatic fire-spinners Night City has ever seen. I was a huge fan back in the day. Her star was rising until, during a particularly dangerous performance involving helium balloons, a fire broke out in the theater. The helium ignited, causing massive damage to the building, the audience, and Jade. In total, ninety-four died. Jade survived but lost both legs in the explosion. Easily replaced, I know, but she vanished from the scene as rumors spread about her unsafe helium storage practices.

Years later, Jade resurfaced as a member of the Bozos, now sporting cybertech legs (installed by Big Top [SEE PAGE 16 ] himself, I hear) and the Bozos' classic clown style. Calling herself Jester, her favorite prank involves putting on a show as a street performer, luring in a crowd, then watching as her circus-mates rush in from the shadows and do their worst.

Jester lives for spectacle. When there's an audience, Jester takes more risks. Bounding around the battlefield, brawling with her legs, slashing flesh with her feet, and taking a shot. All before jumping back to a safe distance, laughing all the while.

I hear, even after all this time Jester still has a fear of helium fire. A helium fire with its orange-pink flame might well throw her off her game.

Tom Smart, aka Tomfool, had the clown biosculpt before he joined the Bozos. It was part of his gimmick as a performer in the underground bloodsport scene. Tomfool, the Killer Clown, would smile ear to ear as he beat his opponents into submission. As you can imagine, the Bozos were tickled by this, with some seeing his shows almost religiously.

The Bozos tried to recruit him but he refused unless one of their number could beat him in the ring. Many tried, but not one Bozo came back victorious. In fact, most came back in body bags.

After Hilaria 2045, Big Top (SEE PAGE 16) visited Tom. We don't know what happened but suddenly Tomfool belonged to Big Top's circus and became their lead combatant during street brawls. We don't think Big Top beat him in a fight, so whatever he offered Tom must have been good enough to buy the killer clown's loyalty.

Tomfool starts fights at a distance, using his air cannon to soften his enemies up. Then he gets up close and personal, using Judo to throw opponents to the ground so he can beat on them at his leisure.

His fellow Bozos usually clap. Even on the battlefield he's quite the showman.

CENTWIT

Clown Gone Bad

Unlike most Bozos, Terry Claymora comes from an actual clown legacy. He's a third-generation member of the Claymoras, a clown family going back to the last century. His father toured worldwide with the circus, performing and wowing audiences on multiple continents.

Terry's father died in Night City, mistaken for a Bozo and assassinated by the Voodoo Boys (SEE CP:R PAGE 309). An apprentice clown at the time, Terry fled into the Combat Zone, where the Bozos found him. He joined up, took the name Centwit, and began terrorizing the Voodoo Boys. This all happened in 2020 and he's still hitting them from the shadows, making their lives hell.

Over the years, Centwit biosculpted himself into an exact replica of his father's clown alter ego. He isn't a full member of Big Top's circus but remains on good terms with the Bozo boss and helps out with his plans on occasion.

In a fight, Centwit is a force, trained in explosives and trick shots, He'll use misdirection and flair to enact damage on his enemies, laugh, and then take a bow. He takes the Bozo love of circus-themed weapons to an extreme with explosives disguised as balloons and pom poms on his costume.

Beware, Centwit is full of surprises.

DEAD RINGER

The Blue One

Even fellow Bozos find it hard to tell the Dead Ringers apart and that's despite their different hair colors. As far as we know, they were born and bred in Night City and, despite their doll-like appearance and playful demeanor, they are deadly little terrors.

After much observation, I've noticed some differences between the two. For example, the blue-haired one is the louder of the twins. She's always telling jokes, making it hard to ignore her. She obviously loves the attention. In a fight, she'll juggle poison grenades or vials, run around the field, and even set fire to things. All while giggling and cracking wise.

The blue-haired Dead Ringer is the distraction. She's loud and flashy on purpose. Like many Bozos, she loves grenades, and usually laces her Scratchers with poison.

While her sister (SEE PAGE 22) will try to pick your pocket, this one prefers looting your corpse when you're twitching on the ground.

When it comes to Bozo stans (and yes, there are entire Garden Patches dedicated to clown fandom) the Dead Ringers rank only behind Jester (SEE PAGE 18) and Tom Fool (SEE PAGE 19) in popularity.

DEAD RINGER

The Pink One

While her sister's (SEE PAGE 21) all flash and pizazz, the pink-haired Deadly Ringer is the spooky, silent sort. She never tells jokes. In fact, she never says a word at all.

Sometimes she giggles, but mostly she creeps silently through the world, fingers slipping into pockets. If you see her sister, check your possessions. There's a good chance you're already missing your gun or your blade or your eb.

She's especially fond of giving her mark's weapons to other Bozos so they can shoot someone with their own pistol or stab them with their own knife.

Like her sister, the pink-haired Ringer carries grenades full of toxins and coats her scratchers with the same nasty substance.

I can't find any information on the sisters from before their time with the clown gang. Most assume they've always been Bozos, adding to rumors they are part of a family line going back for years. Makes you shiver, right?

Bozos giving birth to Bozos. Some say the twins look a lot like Blammo (SEE PAGE 17), but it would be wise not to mention or ask about it. It's a touchy subject.

FINALE

Silent But Deadly

They say you should never bite the hand that feeds you.

A street punk named Kane Nove learned that lesson the hard way when he mouthed off to a local ripperdoc. When Kane bit, the ripperdoc had his muscle hold the streetrat down while he wired his jaw shut. The wire gives a little movement, Kane can sort of chew and he can grunt. But not much more. Then they tossed him in the bay.

Big Top's circus fished Kane out of the water and obviously thought Kane's predicament to be hilarious. They named him Finale and signed him up. The streetrat's rage has only increased since joining.

The other Bozos tease him but he's learned his lesson and is smart enough not to attack them directly. Instead, when they laugh, he gets angry. They laugh some more. He gets angrier. Then they point him at a target and giggle their heads off while he takes out his rage on Night City.

My sources say Big Top (SEE PAGE 16) has promised he'll free Finale's jaw when he's "earned his tongue".

I'm not sure he'll ever actually do it. The Bozos find the whole situation too damn amusing and probably still will when Finale "bites" the big one and dies. His final curtain, if you will.

BURT THE SQUIRT

An Acid Wit

It almost reads like a comic book; after losing all of his hair in an industrial accident, Burt Batail became obsessed with acid. He covered his head with metal plates to hide the massive scars on his scalp and began experimenting, spending whatever downtime he could to perfectly recreate the mixture that took his hair.

He wants to, no joke, use it to inflict permanent baldness on Night City. He thinks it's funny, even if you don't.

Burt joined the Bozos because they promised him an unlimited supply of chemicals and he's thrived as a member. His favorite pranks all involve acid and he's been known to giggle gleefully as he watches people's skin melt off.

Burt followed Big Top (SEE PAGE 16) during the civil war because he was the leader who reached out to him first. He's happy to be just another Bozo with an obsession and, as long as he's allowed to keep playing with acid, he doesn't care who is in charge.

Burt carries a gun loaded with acid rounds and will always attack the target with the most luxurious hair. Even if it's cyberware.

Tech hair or organic hair, it's all the same to him.

DUNCE

A Fool No More

One Fool (SEE PAGE 26) made it through Hilaria 2045 and graduated to full Bozo status.

He used to be Sion Bannerkin but now they call him Dunce. Any sane person would say he survived via luck alone but Dunce insists "it's all in his smile."

While down in the sewers before the fight at the Forlorn Hope, Dunce's guns fell into the sewage. He lost them both but a baseball bat he found while rooting through the muck saved his skin.

Dunce stumbled away from the fight, covered in blood and sewage and glitter, with a hole in his chest and a baseball bat clutched in his hand.

As a reward, Big Top (SEE PAGE 16) fixed him up, melted a mask onto his face, and made him a full-fledged member of his circus.

Dunce's bat is heavy and covered in sharp little points and he'll use it with reckless malice and skill. In a fight, Dunce will draw close and start swinging, taking pot shots with his crappy pistol when he can't get near.

Watch your face. He'll go for the nose whenever he can.

THE FOOL

Tears of a Clown

There's always a Fool on a Bozo battlefield.

You can count on it. The Fool isn't a specific person, but rather a form of initiation. The Bozos of Big Top's circus give "less promising" recruits a mask known as the Good Luck Bag and push them to the front of the line. Fresh meat makes a good shield.

If the Fool survives till the next "fresh meat" comes along, they get to hand off the mask and obtain the biosculpting needed to become a proper member of the circus.

The bag's taken off a corpse more often than it is handed over from graduated Fool to new Fool.

The Bozos see this as a trial by fire. Or maybe just one big joke they play on anyone "fool" enough to want to sign up willingly. Night City isn't fair; especially when the joke's on you.

A Fool's guns are bad and their bright, loud outfits grab a lot of attention on the battlefield. Other Bozos will take any opportunity to use them as a human shield. The bag offers no protection and is hard to see out of.

Honestly, it's amazing anyone survives the fool's trial at all.

DANGER GAL PUMA SQUAD

Liberated from Lazarus Intelligence Analyst 13-Gamma-001

Everyone's heard of Puma Squad. There's an animated series, a Data Pool comic, fashion dolls sold out of Vendits, and premade costumes for ages infant through adult. Made up of a group of attractive and capable operatives, Puma Squad serves as a team of intrepid crime-solvers, and a means by which Michiko Sanderson fosters goodwill in Night City. Hence the merchandising.

While the official Puma Squad origin story claims they were simply five operatives whose various cases all happened to intersect, the truth is Puma Squad is most definitely carefully engineered and cultivated to be extremely photogenic and popular – at least to people who aren't under investigation by them. Even the cartoon and merchandising are investigative tools. It's almost impossible to tell whether the person in the Lynx (SEE PAGE 32) outfit is the actually the real Lynx or a cosplayer with strong crafting skills. Puma Squad has been known to impersonate their own fans.

Base of Operations

Puma Squad operates out of the 11th and 12th levels of the Danger Gal HQ, in a space reserved exclusively for their use. The various team members have suites on the 12th floor, and the rest of the space is used for training simulations, meetings, R&R, R&D, and their extensive armory. They have access to the AV hanger on the building's roof, and to a large range of vehicles from the official Danger Gal pool.

Recent History

The highest profile case Puma Squad has solved to date was the Arboretum Water Lily Heist, where several almost-extinct water lily specimens were stolen from Loggagia Arboretum at Night City University, a high-tech, secure "living vault" for rare and valuable plants. Members of Puma Squad went undercover to infiltrate rogue propagator circles and identified a ring of floral patent pirates in the process, while also recovering the stolen specimens. The theft turned out to have been commissioned by a wealthy, upscale Fixer specializing in biologicals.

Puma Squad took him into custody after documenting the large-scale plant poaching he had funded and committed to make his garden the "most exotic private collection of rare plants in the world", all at the expense of Biotechnica's intellectual property. Danger Gal cleaned up the case and transformed it into an award-winning season-long saga for the Puma Squad animated series.

Resources

Puma Squad has full access both to official and unofficial armories kept by the Corporation. Their equipment loadout tends toward the flashy and attractive, in line with their image – at least when operating in public. During undercover missions, Puma Squad agents avail themselves of subtler weapons and gear so as not to stand out.

DATA

Danger Gal HQ is in Little Europe. For more information SEE CP:R PAGE 311.

Goals

While Puma Squad serves as a walking advertisement for Danger Gal, they are also CEO Michiko Sanderson's personal spearhead in covert, anti-Arasaka operations. In those missions the members of Puma Squad work clandestinely to investigate and identify Arasaka stay-behind agents and eliminate them.

Michiko Sanderson directs Puma Squad to take on a "feel good" case once or twice a year. Usually, the team chooses a target slightly below their weight class and obliterates in a publicized bust, calculated to both win public affection and demonstrate how Danger Gal takes the side of the average choomba.

Simplified and censored versions of these cases are then transformed into cheerful propaganda for public consumption via the animated series and the Data Pool comics. This generates quite a bit of positive PR for Danger Gal, and the merchandise sales help offset Puma Squad's operating costs.

Puma Squad is also responsible for Danger Gal's outreach to and recruitment of YoGangers, due to Tigress' (SEE PAGE 29) personal interest in the matter.

DATA

PANTERA

One Badass Librarian

The agent known as Pantera was born in Vancouver, the child of a custom Braindance editor and a Biotechnica fauna designer. Growing up they experienced regular body dysmorphia, but it took deep introspection over time for them to understand why. Roughly midway through high school, they sought out gender transition bodysculpting and legally changed their name to Shoko Asagiri.

After obtaining a Master's in Library Sciences at a Canadian university, Mx. Asagiri traveled to Night City and took a position there as a research librarian.

They entered Danger Gal's notice after a series of exceptionally discrete data thefts of the, then-unreleased, Elflines Online Chronicles season 2 episodes. Mx. Asagiri did not seek to spoil, sell, or release the data in question; instead, they saved the hours of footage for their personal viewing pleasure.

It was clear to the case's lead investigator, Mouse, that Mx. Asagiri was bored out of their mind in their day job. Needless to say, Danger Gal recruited them straight away, and they've been a key member of Puma Squad ever since.

We have been unable to substantiate rumors of a relationship, romantic or sexual, between them and Mouse.

TIGRESS

YoGanger Made Good

Records on the operative known as Tigress are patchy and incomplete, due to a life spent primarily in the Combat Zones. What we do know is that she organized and led a YoGang, making sure the other children under her watch had food, guns, and a safe place to stay by brokering favors with various boostergangs.

Eventually Tigress grew up, as did the few other kids in her gang who survived. Most found a place as Edgerunners or fell into membership in one boostergang or another. Tigress gained the notice of Danger Gal when she took on a contract to assassinate a VIP the NeoCorp was providing protection to.

Buying her contract provided a double win. The client went unassassinated and Danger Gal gained a skilled new operative.

While Tigress is generally self-interested and amoral, she is a good team member, works well with others, and holds a soft spot for orphans and other waifs. She's the driving force behind Puma Squad's overtures to various YoGangers, and offers food and temporary latchkey refuge from time to time.

So long as Danger Gal supports her outreach efforts, we predict she will remain loyal to the Corporation.

DOC MITTENS

A Beary Good Field Medic

Agent Naomi Alexis grew up with a struggling Reclaimer family in the badlands surrounding what's left of Colorado Springs. When her family's well ran dry, they failed to raise the funds to drill a new one, and faced starvation.

Desperate, her parents sold her younger sister, Minna, to a wealthy Night City couple who were supposedly looking to adopt. To prevent a scene from occurring, Naomi was sent out to gather firewood the day the deal went down. By the time she returned, Minna and her new "family" were long gone.

The loss of her sister stayed with Naomi. The farm's prospects eventually improved after they redrilled their well but, without her sister, Naomi lost all desire to stay. Instead, she joined a Nomad Pack who came to resupply at her parents' settlement and talked her way into apprenticing with their healer.

Eventually, the Pack visited Night City, and Naomi took her leave to resume her search for Minna. Naomi accepted employment with Danger Gal largely to use their reach and databases in her quest to locate Minna, and was eventually promoted to Puma Squad.

Minna has yet to be found. Locating her might be the key to securing Naomi's loyalty away from Danger Gal.

MOUSE

Cat Burglar and Poster Girl

The child of two middle-management-tier Execs, Moira Kahn grew up in Night City. She had security, comfort, and an adequate education, but also an utter lack of emotional security or affection. Her parents were too busy to pay much attention to her in her early childhood, but were also jealous enough that they would dismiss any nanny she grew close to. An average student, the only thing Moira seemed to excel in was gymnastics, and several Corporations were interested in sponsoring her nascent career.

A car accident in Moira's high school years cost her both her legs and her inattentive parents, and drove her deep into depression. She lingered in the Corporate Orphan Training Program for three months before aging out on her eighteenth birthday, and absconded before they could force her into a menial job in accounting.

Moira resurfaced as a cat burglar five years later, leading Danger Gal operatives on a merry chase across the rooftops after a series of flashy heists, made possible by her natural flexibility, agility, and custom-designed cyberware. Michiko Sanderson noted her innate talents and made the recruitment pitch herself, offering the thief exotic body-sculpting, a new identity, and a place with the company.

Mouse's loyalty to Danger Gal, and to Michiko Sanderson, appears to be unshakable.

LYNX

Enjoys Shooting People

Bella Sawyer grew up in a highly abusive environment with an alcoholic father, overworked mother, and her big sister, Jack. Eventually, her mother managed to escape with the children to the home of their grandmother. Unfortunately, Grandma only agreed to take the family in if she got to raise the children under the strict doctrine of the Inquisitors. Both girls grew up following a harsh Inquisitor regimen and were forbidden to interact with any other children. When big sister Jack came out as lesbian, she was cast out, and took to The Street before finding apprenticeship work with none other than Eran Malour.

Bella found a happier family following Grandma's arrest on terrorism charges after the Inquisitors hit Rocklin Augmentics. Bella's mother, a reluctant convert to the cause, died in the attack, and the girl was adopted by an NCPD police officer who worked the case. She tried for a while to follow in her adopted father's footsteps, and joined the force with ambitious zeal. In fact, Bella attracted the notice of Danger Gal after she applied for the position of City Executioner. Rejected on the grounds of her youth and inexperience, she accepted employment from Danger Gal, a Company willing to help her advance up the ladder without years spent walking a beat.

Many of Agent Sawyer's firearms are provided by her older sister Jack, who now works for Night City's newest weapon wunderkind workshop, Faisal's Customs.

THE DIGITAL DIVAS

Prepared by Juana "Catrolos" García (Danger Gal Music Specialist)

The Digital Divas are a brat-punk band who exploded in popularity after an arsonist took their song, Burn it Down, a little too literally and proceeded to methodically torch locations near where the band played, granting them a spotlight in local media and tons of social commentary on the Garden.

The event didn't grant them "national sensation" status but, like most bands, they still dream of going global.

Base of Operations

The band has a love/hate relationship with their manager Sizzle Jams (SEE PAGE 38), who handles their finances, pays them just enough to survive, and covers the expenses of their living and rehearsal space – an abandoned cinema in the east of Heywood's Industrial Zone.

Sizzle Jams operates from an office park in New Westbrook, close enough to admire the Executive Zone, but far away enough to be affordable.

Recent History

After the Digital Divas released their latest single, Burn it Down, an arsonist brought its lyrics to life by starting a fire every time the band played a show. Some media just reported the incidents. Others ran sensationalist stories to paint the band as responsible for the actions of a crazed fan. What somehow didn't hit the screamsheets was how the Digital Divas themselves hired a crew to find the arsonist. Although a suspect was identified, the reasons for her attack are yet unknown since she flatlined herself when caught and didn't leave a paper trail behind. The arsonist was confirmed to be Bev Hatric, secretary at DyneTech with no criminal record or history of mental illness.

Also at that time, during a concert at New Westbrook, a Ziggurat Netrunner named Jezz Stiles died after stepping in front of a passing truck. Although originally ruled as a suicide, her mother, Militech freelancer recruitment specialist Major Veronica Stiles, launched her own investigation and determined her daughter's death was related to a rogue AI known as the Reaper. As far as I can tell, the Digital Divas themselves have no connection to the hostile AI.

Whew! That's a lot of drama for a local band.

Resources

Whilst the Digital Divas are paid miserably, even by Night City standards, the budget for their equipment is on par with their local fame. Sizzle Jams seems to be a "feed the art, starve the artists" sort of manager. Concert security is usually handled by freelance Edgerunners or the occasional Nomad Pack.

They are, through their manager, in touch with Fixers across the Pacifica Confederation to set up gigs and acquire any specific equipment they may need for a show. Although they don't have an in-house Tech to keep their machinery sharp, they farm out equipment repairs to a fixit specialist from Old Japantown named Matt.

The band's groupies are passionate punk-wannabes desperate to get a picture with the Divas to post on the Garden. However, most won't risk their safety or freedom for the band.

Goals

The Digital Divas are ambitious enough to want to be the next Crimson Steel but self-aware enough to know they aren't the next Samurai.

Their thirst for fame is not the most extreme example you can find in the industry and they seem to have a certain moral compass, limiting what they'll do to boost their popularity.

ANDRÉ NEZ

Gunner Turned Drummer

André joined the ranks of Militech's army to protect America's "national interests" around the globe after growing up an orphan in the streets of Night City. He soon realized the primal rage and affinity for guns that he used to survive as a streetrat could help him thrive in a military career. At least, until he hit an ethical wall. Discharged after he refused to kill a Nomad kid, André discovered his skills wouldn't transfer well to private security. It turns out strong moral values were an obstacle to career advancement.

Desperate for work, André joined a building crew in Night City but lost his legs in a construction accident when a GRAF3 stumbled over a beam and landed on him. His employer was surprisingly helpful in the aftermath, helping him obtain a Rocklin Augmentics cyberchair and keeping him on. Still, André found construction work unsatisfying and embraced a new career, projecting the primal rage still beating in his heart from his early youth into playing drums. During his audition for the Digital Divas he unleashed a storm of rhythm so intense the other members of the band still talk about it to this day.

Since joining the band, André has had his Cyberchair modified into a full percussive kit with Interface Plugs, allowing him to neurologically experience the sound of his drums. The connection also automatically transmits beats to Firewall (SEE PAGE 35) for synchronized effects.

FIREWALL

Light and Sound Rigger

In their younger days, Firewall worked as an AI-assisted "artist" until the pseudo-intelligence they used spontaneously transformed into a savage, self-aware digital entity and violently began "requesting" royalties. Apparently, Firewall had been feeding the algorithm with illegally obtained Corporate data and the AI ended up learning a couple of inconvenient truths on how the economy operates.

As terrified of Netwatch as they were of a psychopathic self-aware program, Firewall gave the machine a fatal dose of C9 antivirus, blowing its server to binary bits before the digital authorities could so much as say "encryption."

The story traveled through the grapevine across Night City and, as legends tend to do, morphed from a simple moment of explosive-driven panic into an epic clash between a young artist and a rogue AI, earning Firewall some respect amongst their peers and a few free drinks down at Short Circuit. Firewall received some insubstantial death threats from AI-rights activists for their efforts, but nothing above the usual toxicity of the Garden's trolls. Fortunately for them, Netwatch considers the entire story just an unsubstantiated rumor and hasn't bothered investigating.

Now needing work, Firewall answered a "help wanted" ad from Sizzle Jams (SEE PAGE 38) and was put in charge of lights, audio, and effects for the Digital Divas.

JOSÉ QUISPE

Brat-Punk Songsmith

Raised on the Nomad trade routes between Bolivia and the Pacifica Confederation, José came to Night City when he was thirteen with a head full of dreams of becoming a rock star but needs pushed him into a less glamorous occupation. He ran as an errand boy for a now-defunct dorpher gang called the Desperados. Fortunately, unlike his mates, he never laid hands on the merchandise, so he was the last Desperado standing as the rest of the gang fell to overdose, one after another.

His days as a ganger gave him a useful skill set with guns, which in turn gave him a reputation for good aim across Night City. He also didn't lose his mother tongues Spanish and Quechua, giving the songs he wrote a unique flair. At sixteen he began gaining popularity as a self-produced musician on the Garden so it didn't take long for Sizzle Jams (SEE PAGE 38) to recruit him as the Digital Divas songwriter and keytarist.

While he's a Rockerboy by day, by night José is as addicted to Elflines Online as his old gang mates were to Black Lace. His obsession has led to some missed rehearsals in recent days. So far, José has convinced his bandmates he's slammin' it with a new input/output because he's worried they'll think less of him if they knew about his real hobby. On the other hand, his virtual alter ego is pretty badass, so you never know.

PAT REZIN

Power to the People?

Growing up with her fathers, two Zhirafa engineers, Pat had exposure to construction machines from a young age and developed a fascination with the sounds and rhythms they produced. As a child, she experimented with creating her own music using circuit boards and electronic components salvaged from drones and other technology her fathers dragged home from work.

As she grew up, Pat noticed her music skills made her popular. Craving greater acclaim, she learned to play guitar and implanted an AudioVox, hoping to grow a fanbase and attract notice as a Rockerboy. Cultivating a persona as a rebel musician, Pat loves recording speeches for her Garden Patch followers about how her objective in life is giving power back to the people. So far, no one has bothered to ask her exactly what she's actually doing to restore that power.

Although José (SEE PAGE 36) writes the songs and André (SEE PAGE 34) sets the beat, it is Pat's husky stylings and sharp, intense delivery to which, first and foremost, fans gravitate. Pat's also gaining attention for the judo throws she uses when fans try to give her unwanted extra attention.

Harsher critics in Night City believe she's just a talentless, pretty face who draws fans more for her popularity and looks than for her musical ability. Pat's fans argue male Rockerboys never face such criticism.

SIZZLE JAMS

Independent Entertainment Agent

Sizzle Jams is a woman who you can trust. By which I mean if you cross her, you can trust she'll have your legs removed from your torso. Despite wearing no weapons, her reputation of dealing harshly with difficult people is widely known and even her casual acquaintances are careful to put on their best smile in front of her, though clever operators know how to take advantage of her cold-burning temper.

It's thought her reputation comes from the time when she worked as a courier in her youth. She reportedly went to great lengths to ensure no one would lay a finger on her packages, as she wouldn't get paid if delivery wasn't completed. The bike couriers of Night City still talk about her ruthlessness though, since no one bothers fishing dead bodies out of the bay, her actual body count may be exaggerated.

On the other hand, she's a big fish in a small bowl – her fame doesn't extend beyond the local entertainment industry and few in the Corp world know her name nor would they care to learn it.

Sizzle Jams is an independent entertainment agent with a surprisingly good track record. Suspicious of her success, I dug deeper and uncovered some juicy rumors pointing to a high-level DMS Exec by the name of Albert Rudd secretly grooming her from the shadows, for unknown reasons.

EDGERUNNERS

Prepared by Justin Case (the name says it all)

We also serve who watch and spread vicious gossip, I mean carefully vetted intelligence, no? Whether corner-case, space-case, cold-case, missing-case or – in this case – edge-case, Justin Case is on the case, and at your service.

Life on the Edge can be fast and brutal, and yet there are more than a few who have made it work for them and who are still around in spite of the danger. Edgerunners have taken the tools and tech of the Time of the Red and used it to remake themselves into operators who can survive, even thrive, on The Street and on their own terms. Or, at least on the best terms they can negotiate. That negotiation is the key to understanding Edgerunners, both working with them and against them. Chances are equally good for either, depending on who is paying them. Because of this, these dossiers evaluate Edgerunners as potential allies and as potential adversaries. Just know that, either way, it's usually nothing personal.

What do Edgerunners want? Money. When do they want it? Usually half up-front and the rest when they finish the job. Do they have other goals? Of course, but as individuals and not as a group. About the only things Edgerunners have in common is their profession and their professionalism. Edgerunners live by a code and their reputation is often the most valuable thing they have. You take the job, you do the job. Sometimes people look to take advantage of that code, but they also find out that Edgerunners talk, and word gets around about users and exploiters, assuming the offended Edgerunners don't simply take care of the problem themselves.

Some Edgerunners live on the Edge but also inhabit other circumstances, living double- (or even triple-) lives where they "pass" in another society while also maintaining their Edgerunner life and persona. There's always the hustle. Some want to eventually put aside one or more of their different lives and dedicate themselves fully to a specific path, but circumstances often don't allow for it, not until the Edgerunner makes the kind of score needed to provide the freedom that comes with resources.

The Edgerunner life doesn't usually lend itself to settling down and having a family, so often an Edgerunner's "legacy" is their name, reputation, and what they pass on to the people they choose to mentor in the life. "Elder" Edgerunners are rare — the lifestyle doesn't lend itself to longevity — but they are all the more deserving of respect because of that.

As requested, the Edgerunners profiled here aren't connected permanently to any specific crew.

Base of Operations

You'll find Edgerunners everywhere in Night City, from the lowest tent city to the highest starscraper. Most live relatively modest lives in converted cargo containers or small conapts.

Recent History

Edgerunner history is Night City history. They've always been there, acting as the grease keeping the wheels of power in motion – or helping the Corporate machine fall apart with a well-timed push.

Resources

For most Edgerunners? Their resources are their tools, whatever contacts they've made, and their word. An Edgerunner who plays the people who trust them dirty doesn't last long in this town.

Goals

Ask a dozen Edgerunners what they want out of life and you'll get a baker's dozen worth of answers. Money. Fame. Power. Survival. You name it, there's a motivation beating in the heart of some Edgerunner or another.

Some even want to make the world a better place. Poor things.

TETSUO

Great with a Knife

Have you been to Daiseikō in Pacifica Playgrond for sushi? If not, you must try it! So good! It's not easy to get a reservation but I know from experience dropping the boss's name can open something up. What... ? It was field research! Anyway, Night City's newest and hottest traditional Japanese restaurant has more to offer than what's on the menu. There's also the equally yummy celebrity head-chef, Ryu Sakai, who is nightly preparing all kinds of delectable dishes and occasionally dropping by tables to stoically accept the accolades of his satisfied guests.

What they don't know is, up until just before Daiseikō opened, "Ryu Sakai" didn't exist. Oh, sure, there's a data-trail for him, but it was retroactively inserted into the right databases. From what I've been able to put together, Ryu appeared in Night City not long after a Solo called Tetsuo disappeared from the Japanese Edgerunner scene with a substantial score stolen from the Yakuza in Chiba prefecture. Definitely enough to pay for some bodysculpting and a new business venture. Interesting, no?

Naming his restaurant "Big Success" turned out to be a self-fulfilling prophecy. Maybe he's been too successful, since the Night City Yakuza have taken a liking to the place. If they talk to their cousins back in Japan, it could be Chef Sakai will need friends in the near future.

CRAB LORD

Night City Street Legend

A literal urban legend, some people think "CrAB Lord" is a title passed down through a series of Edgerunners, but I'm here to tell you the original CrAB Lord is still up and running — so to speak. He honestly doesn't do any real "running" these days and could use a hip replacement or some new legs, and most of his income probably goes to the daily cocktail of pharmaceuticals he uses to maintain himself. But then remotes and drones have always been his arms and legs, eyes and ears and hands, and that hasn't changed.

If anything, ol' CrAB Lord knows all the tricks to get the most out of his tech and could teach the new generation of Edgerunners a thing or two.

While CrAB Lord still goes out into the field to be close enough to control and manage his "kiddies," he prefers to stay somewhere as secure as possible on-site while still within his portable NET Architecture's drone control range. With all of the remote surveillance and infiltration work he has done over the years, CrAB Lord is a treasure trove of intel on Night City.

I've heard he has terabytes of recordings and data squirreled away, although clearly none of it juicy enough to set the old man up for retirement, since he's still at it — at least, not so far as anyone knows, anyway.

The woman they call "Auntie Fist" is someone who you want on your side — or at least you don't want her mad at you, if you can avoid it. Tía Puño used to work for Militech but she proved a "disciplinary problem" when a new superior didn't understand her protective streak, couldn't take a hint, and ended up with a broken jaw. Ultimately, no hard feelings on either side, since Tía still works for Militech from time to time, but she does so on a strictly freelance basis now, outside the chain of command.

Tía Puño is as close as you will find to an Edgerunner "den mother," but she ain't baking no cookies. Her specialty is explosive ordinance, always punching through obstacles, one way or another. She's as cool under fire as anyone I've ever seen, and there's no better choice when you need someone to defuse a bomb or plant a shaped-charge to blow through a wall while security is bearing down on you.

She looks after her people and fiercely defends her friends. If you ever find yourself on the wrong side of Tía Puño that might be your out: Appeal to her sense of protectiveness and fair-play. Assuming she buys your act, you might just get through to her with your face intact.

BACKHAND

Freelance Tech

How can someone be so good at organizing and getting things done (and looking good doing it) and be so bad at getting people to like her? The phrase "I didn't come here to make friends" could have been invented for Cicely Feng. People started calling her "Backhand" early in her career because of her gift for praising and punishing with the same phrase.

Rather than changing course, Cicely took "Backhand" as a badge of honor and dared anyone to get on the receiving end of hers. Usually, her backhand is verbal, but I know of at least one physical example using that third arm of hers. Some people never learn.

Thing is, while Backhand prefers not to rely on anyone, she can be relied upon to get things done, no matter what it takes, or who it ticks off. She's a freelance Tech par excellence.

When you want it done, and done right, and you don't overly care about anyone's feelings, she's the one to call. In the same vein, if you are up against Backhand, understand that loyalty for her is limited.

The people working with her might be willing to turn on her, but only if they think they can get away with it.

JUMPSHOT

Leaping into the News

Angela Banks picked up the handle "Jumpshot" when she literally jumped from an AV-4 with her camera running in order to get a shot of a NCPD beat-down on organized protesters near where South Night City borders the Glen. When her bosses decided not to use the footage because it was "likely to further inflame violence" (among their advertisers, that is) Angela released it herself. Thing is, she might as well have signed her name to it, given how unique it was.

Jumpshot went freelance after that, still as dedicated as ever to getting in, getting the shot, and getting it out there so people can see for themselves what is happening. She's found work with 24/7's (SEE PAGE 46) Never Blink News, along with others in Night City, and is someone to involve if you want a story out there, but not if you're looking for discretion. Jumpshot will go to great lengths to get the story, but then she absolutely will tell it.

If you're looking to keep something under wraps, then Jumpshot works best as a distraction from the main attraction. Give her something else to focus on, another story to pursue and release, and you may buy yourself a news-cycle or two. Just whatever you do, don't let her get wind that you're setting her up that way — or that I told you to, for that matter.

24/7

Never Blink News

The name and logo of Never Blink News (NBN! 24/7!) are intended to make you think it is a sizable organization delivering the unvarnished truth to discerning viewers, but the unvarnished truth about that is NBN's just one guy, 24/7. He's journalist, anchorman, researcher, and oftentimes camera and soundman as well: a one-person media crusade.

24/7 ("sometimes shortened to "Toofer") got his start in Corp-run news. Unlike most other idealistic newbie journalists on the Megacorp treadmill, his experience with the realities of the media world didn't lead him to trade his principles for job security. Just the opposite, in fact. He quit in protest over media censorship and bias and took it to The Street, producing his own stories and content for his own pirate channel. The way I know he's a true idealist is how some of Never Blink News' exposés could have earned 24/7 a tidy pay-off if he'd only kept the lid on them as a "favor" to the right people.

24/7's a truth-seeking bloodhound to sic on targets, provided you want the story splashed across the Data Pool. Once he's got the scent, he doesn't give up. He's also a potential ally to other Edgerunners, especially if they're able to provide information, access, and protection for his journalistic crusades.

DERBY

Star Jammer

Do we go in for extreme sports? Because when I first saw "Demolition" Derby in action, I thought she was a pair of cat ears away from being one of ours. She started out on the roller derby circuit in Night City and the lady knows how to play to a crowd as well as she can clothesline or hip-check an opponent.

Thing is, Derby learned things outside the rink can be even more dangerous, especially when money is on the line. Her subdermal armor and fighting skills may have kept some leg-breakers from doing their job on her and her teammates, but roller derby pays like shit, so she's been looking for more lucrative work of late and getting some upgrades to do it, including a subdermal grip for a smartgun link.

In short, she's hungry and she's capable, making her a perfect candidate to hire (did I mention she could easily be one of ours?). Of course, that also means she might end up working for whoever is paying to run jobs against us. I don't think she's the type who will flip for a better offer, since she does seem to have a strong sense of fair play and values her professional reputation.

Come to her with work that gets her money, security, and maybe a chance to stick it to "The Man?" Then I think you'll have yourself a deal.

FORTY

Making Music and Raising Hell

If you want to know about Forty, start by downloading her music catalog. I recommend listening to Famous for Famous and Not for Nothing first, followed by When I Was and Song for the Others if you want to know more about what makes this Rockerboy tick.

The long and the short of it is: Forty's dad was Adam Dore, still a top-forty "hit" with the tween and teen set, if you go by the Garden's numbers. Thing was, heartthrob "A.Dore" was a musician's musician who taught his kid how to sing and play from childhood.

Unfortunately, he was also a lousy businessman who ended up screwed over by DMS thanks to a predatory contract. Before he knew it, his "big break" broke him under what amounted to Corporate indentured servitude. His way out was to hide some of his work and pass it along with the only other legacy he had to offer: A hard-won lesson not to trust those "big breaks."

Forty took her dad's files, lessons, and a serious grudge against the Corps forward to do her own thing, reinventing herself and hitting the Night City underground music scene. There she found community, as well as the Edgerunner scene, and has been making music and raising hell ever since.

I'll be honest here. I like Grease – it's kind of hard not to. He's as smooth as his namesake, which he says is all about "greasing the wheels" rather than anything more fun. Grease is like that: all business, at least so far as I can tell. "I'm just the middleman," he says, and that's the maxim he sticks to: get people and things together, get the job or the deal done, take the money and go.

That professional attitude and knack for getting things done make Grease an up-and-coming Fixer on The Street, although he still keeps a low profile since, as he says, "Poking your head up is a good way to get it shot off."

If you're looking for a competent Fixer, I'd recommend Grease in a second. If, however, you're looking for a risk-taker, or someone so fiercely dedicated to getting the job done they'll go the extra distance, look elsewhere. Grease isn't that kind of guy.

If the job needs to be scrubbed because he thinks it won't work, he won't hesitate to do so. If you're going up against him, Grease is loyal — he won't risk his reputation by taking bribes to abandon his client — but you can convince him the smart thing to do is walk away and tell his client the job just isn't happening.

REDEYE

Runs the Edge and Your Games

If you think Redeye looks more like she'd fit in with some elite Corporate Netrunning squad, don't ever tell her that. I hear she escaped just that kind of life and doesn't want to be anywhere near it again, unless she's hacking into some Corp's NET Architecture. Redeye never felt she belonged: in her "upright citizen" Corporate family, in their planned career for her, or in being assigned male at birth. She was a natural coder from the first days of playing "I Can Code!™" and running roleplaying games for friends as a kid, but being a Corporate clonerunner, chained to a terminal to grind out executables? Not for her.

First chance she got, Redeye slipped out of Corporate-land and got her first taste of the real Night City, from the clubs to the code-havens. There was no turning back.

Eventually, she disappeared from her former life and hit The Street, earning the reputation and the cred to transition to life on her terms. Redeye still has that daring spirit, which makes her good at the kind of work Netrunners do these days. She can get into a facility with a team and get down to work.

If you want to get in with her, drop a mention of RPGs (the games, not the grenades) – Redeye still runs them for her Edgerunner friends on the regular.

SABER

Freelance Corporate Troubleshooter

Some people build their reputation on their loyalty, competence, and success, others on the treachery, incompetence, and failures of others. Denny Haulk, known as Saber, did both. True to his name, Saber enjoys a good fencing match, either literal (he was on the fencing team at NCU) or verbal.

His somewhat argumentative nature means Saber doesn't fit into a comfortable Corporate hierarchy. Rather than letting this be a career-ender, he turned the flaw to an advantage. Now Saber is the freelancer who companies hire to come in and fix their messes and he gets the job done, no matter who that ticks off.

Still, Saber made good impressions where it counted. Early in his freelance career, he saved the life of an Exec targeted with assassination, even though he lost both arms to a monofilament blade. The grateful Exec paid for Saber's medical care and new cyberarms and connected him with other potential clients.

While he still puts loyalty to his client first, Saber learned a hard lesson about jumping before he looks, and he's a good deal more cautious these days. That includes the backup weapon and shield built into his cyberarms so Saber will never be caught unarmed (if you'll excuse the expression) again.

TORCH

Fire-Wielding Tech

Plenty of people, understandably, want to burn it all down these days, but a few actually know how to build it back up again afterwards. Enter João "Torch" Barbosa Alves, He's the owner of Torch's Total Repairs on the south end of the Upper Marina and a believer in the maxim "if you can't fix it, you don't really own it".

That's an increasing challenge as the world slowly rights itself and the Megacorps claw their way back into the picture.

Nevertheless, if there is a way to crack open a case and fix what's inside, Torch has either figured out a way to do it or determined it can't be done.

He'll tell you so either way.

What's more, since most of Torch's repair jobs skirt the bounds of legality anyway, he does the work without asking a lot of questions, although the obviously illegal stuff is going to cost you extra.

Torch got his handle from regularly wielding a blowtorch and soldering iron to cut things open and patch things up, but I also know for a fact that he has a working flame-thrower in his shop and he knows how to use it, amongst other weapons, when there's a need.

CRASHER

Weddings and Funerals

There are Medias who believe in and fight for "the power of the press" – even if many of them don't know what a printing press was, the poor dears. Crasher ain't one of them. His handle is short for "Wedding Crasher" and he's an out-and-out "have camera will travel" mercenary.

If you need it shot – on video, that is – Crasher will shoot it, provided the money is right, and ideally there's a buffet or open bar as part of the deal. His job is to get the images, whether it is some Corporate brat's lavish themed birthday party, a high-society wedding, an illegal chop-shop in operation, or a staged underground fight.

Thing is, Crasher is good at what he does and he's smart enough to keep a "personal archive" of potentially useful footage; he's a digital pack-rat who never deletes anything, especially if it might prove incriminating to someone else someday. Considering how much you can fit on a memory chip these days, he could be carrying his entire archive around with him and still have a dozen backups squirreled away in hidey holes around the city.

And, for the right price, he'll search through his back-footage: a unique historical archive of Night City life for the past few years.

FLASHER

He'll Show You His Goods

Full disclosure, I'm the one who tagged Mal Devincher with the handle "Flasher." I mean, look at him: If you saw him opening up that skanky coat to show you his cheap-ass wares, what would you think?

It's just a relief he's more opportunist than exhibitionist, I'll tell you.

Flasher is one of those shifty hustlers you can find all over the city, always on the lookout for anything he can sell, and anyone he can sell to, in order to pick up a few eb.

At the least, Flasher has an eye for an opportunity and a deal. He's strictly small-time and a lot of his wares are, too.

He's more likely to sell you a scratched-up Teen Dream auto-mag that'll melt the first time you burst fire it, or whatever else "got dropped by a delivery drone" that week, than quality goods.

While I personally wouldn't go to Flasher for whatever he's got stowed under that coat (on any level) don't underestimate his value as a source of information as well as wares.

Like I said, he's always hustling, on the lookout, meaning he sees and hears a lot of what's going down on The Street.

HAMMER

All the World's a Nail

They used to say when all you've got is a hammer, every problem tends to look like a nail, but conversely, there are some problems that are best handled with, shall we say, a blunt instrument. For those problems there are guys like Hammer. Harlan Briggs has a story you'll find all over: An ex-private military grunt who signed up to drag himself out of poverty and put a talent for the ol' ultra-violence to use only to discover taking orders and being shoved onto the front-lines to get shot wasn't all that.

After some "discipline problems" and a lack of advancement opportunities past "cannon fodder" Hammer decided to get out and go into business for himself.

While not quite as blunt as the name implies, Hammer does tend to deal with problems directly and forcefully. If that's what you're looking for, then he's a good choice: up-and-coming, but without the rep needed to demand higher prices.

He's smart enough to know who's paying the bills and to act accordingly, and I think he'd most likely stay bought once he's taken a job. Hammer cultivates that "nothing personal, just business" attitude but he can still get distracted flexing for anyone he wants to impress, something to be aware of if you hire him, or to exploit if you go up against him.

LEVERAGE

Edgerunner by Accident

Some people are born to the Edgerunning life, others have it thrust upon them by circumstance, and still others, like Leverage, kind of fall into it by accident. Leverage was working late as an on-site Corporate Tech when he unexpectedly found himself in the middle of a group of Edgerunners sneaking into the building.

Leverage wasn't exactly feeling a lot of job satisfaction at the time, so he helped the Edgerunners out in order to screw over his bosses (and to save his own skin). He was the "Leverage" they needed to get the job done.

Turned out that he liked the experience so much he couldn't stop thinking about it. Hard to go back to Corp drudge-work after a thrill like that – plus there was always a chance his employers might find out what really happened and make him pay, either in eb or in blood.

So, Leverage quit and decided to take up the Edgerunner life himself.

The guy's a decent Tech who is still learning the ropes. Pay him well and you can probably earn his loyalty pretty easily. He's a good resource to start cultivating now, before he earns a reputation and gets more expensive – or before he manages to get himself killed.

GENERATION RED

Prepared by Agent Gib (on desk duty due to an assignment going south)

The kids ain't all right, to borrow a phrase. Night City has more than its fair share of children whose families are absent, broken, uncaring, or just too busy to look after the rugrats.

Without the resources or training to be able to protect themselves, most of the time those kids wind up in deep shit, but every so often a clever or lucky group forms an enduring YoGang and manages to carve out a temporary bastion of near-stability for themselves. Generation Red is one of those lucky few. I'm just not sure how long their luck will last.

I can see why the Boss wants to recruit them, but I don't think it's going to be a simple task.

Base of Operations

Generation Red's claimed an abandoned office building in the Old Combat Zone a couple of blocks southeast of the Glen as a clubhouse. It used to be pretty snazzy, but the decorative statuary is crumbling, the fountain's run dry, and the stick-on lighting strips the gang put up flicker like strobe lighting in Club Atlantis on occasion. Still, it's home for many of them, and they've done some damn hard work to make it so.

They've turned most of the ground floor into a skate park, with ramps built from scavenged debris, they've created some comfortable spaces to sleep on the upper floors, and they've covered the boring beige walls with spray-painted artwork and poetry.

I think they even have a live plant in there somewhere.

Recent History

Generation Red is focused on surviving. Which isn't to say that they're not also a bunch of viciously determined little menaces who'll put up more of a fight than anybody's bargained for, just that they're not actively seeking out chances to make trouble.

A couple of adult gangers discovered this recently; they thought they could boot Generation Red out of their clubhouse and move in, and instead got their asses soundly kicked. The downside of kicking ass and taking names, though, is attention, and at least one of Generation Red's members is worried about the consequences of drawing too much of it, as a group of kids without any real backup.

Generation Red's leader, Apex (SEE PAGE 59), on the other hand, wants to keep anybody from being in a position to tell them what to do, because it's always just one more favor...

Resources

They're resourceful kids, but they're still kids. They have what a handful of determined and clever children can scrounge up or steal. They've booby-trapped their clubhouse to hell and back and Tetra appropriated a rocket launcher from her parents' weapons closet, but they're not going to be toting the latest heavy pistols from Militech.

Some of their parents have influence with their Corporations, but bringing in a "guardian" is going to be the absolute last resort for these kids. If they agree to join up with Danger Gal... well, they may not get explicit help, but they might end up far better-supplied.

DATA

To learn more about the Old Combat Zone SEE CP:R PAGE 299.

Goals

The little menaces want what kids always want – to be themselves, without a bunch of adults telling them what to do. But even the most dedicated loners tend to care about companionship and some degree of stability, somewhere deep down. With the right lever, I think we can turn them into the next generation of Danger Gal (SEE PAGE 27) operatives. The trick is finding the right lever.

Hell, maybe it'll make their lives better to be gobbled up by the Corporate machine. Better us than the Maelstrom, right?

BLADES

On the Edge of Adulthood

Birth name unknown. Blades has been on The Street since she was a very young child, and she's survived on sheer grit, determination, and a lot of luck. She's made many connections during her time on the streets, and she knows the scavenging sites of the Old Combat Zone inside and out. Her experience of lacking safety and security is likely why she wants it so badly in her life, and she admired Danger Gal even before Tigress of Puma Squad (SEE PAGE 29) first contacted her.

Blades lost her eye and her legs fighting off a group of scavengers who were trying to eliminate the competition, and the story's gotten around – she's got a reputation for fighting like a wildcat among her contacts. As a gesture of good will in the recruitment efforts, Danger Gal funded the replacement of Blades' medical-grade cyberlegs with the upgradeable ones and skate feet she has now.

Blades isn't quite sure what to do with Tetra's hero-worship (SEE PAGE 60), but she's invested in the kids in the gang. Tigress has encouraged Blades to use her influence to convince the other members of Generation Red to work with Danger Gal.

I'm not sure she'll manage to do anything other than cause a schism, but hey – I'm just the analyst here, right?

Born Marianna Brooks to a pair of Corporate cogs working for Zhirafa. Her parents were expecting their daughter to be a good little uncomplaining gearbit, and were surprised when, after experiencing abuse at the hands of one of their higher-ups, Apex fled and set up in the Old Combat Zone with the help of her friend Lookout (SEE PAGE 63).

The event left Apex with a deep distrust of adults and their motivations, and I can't blame her. She's a natural leader, stubborn as hell, fiercely independent, and has built up quite a little collection of other disaffected kids.

Generation Red's recent encounter with a group of gangers looking to take over their clubhouse has the kids flying high – they beat a group of adults, and it's Apex they have to thank.

Well, her and a contribution from Tetra's parents' weapons closet (SEE PAGE 60), but we all know how easy it is for even the best-supplied mission to go to shit because of a leadership fuckup.

Apex and her crew would be a valuable asset to Danger Gal, but Apex's mistrust will be a real problem. She's got no love for Corps, no matter how sparkly their cat ear headbands are.

TETRA

Latchkey Kid Chaos

Born Andrea Olivetti to a pair of security Execs who work for Petrochem. Tetra's parents are decidedly absent – I'd be damn surprised if they'd recognize their kid if they saw her, given how little attention they pay to her, her life, and her interests.

Her parents' obliviousness extends beyond their kid – Tetra got her rocket launcher right out of their unsecured weapons closet, and they haven't missed it yet, even though Tetra's made use of it on the gangers who were trying to oust Generation Red from their clubhouse.

The martial arts classes Tetra's parents signed her up for in lieu of hiring an actual babysitter have proved useful too. Tetra met the other members of Generation Red via Wheelie (SEE PAGE 65); Petrochem was in talks with his family before the crash, and Tetra insisted on keeping in touch.

Tetra's a bit bossy, but she's so over the moon about having friends, she's happy to spend a good chunk of her allowance on things for the gang.

HI-STICK

Street Hockey Meets Street Poetry

Born LeShawna Johnson. Her parents died six years ago, but she was already living with her extended family – grandmother, aunts, uncles, cousins – in a couple of cargo containers in the South Cargo Village. Hi-Stick spends time with her clan and will run home if they call, but she has her own room at the clubhouse, partly to store her collection of stuffed animals. She's both an excellent street hockey player and a poet.

During games, Hi-Stick's checked opponents twice her size, which is going to serve her well if she catches the wrong person's attention with her art.

She's won a few small awards for her poems – she focuses on the interaction between humans and the Corporate machine and paid for her EMP threading with the Eurobucks from her prize money.

I'm not a fan of poetry myself, but I've read some of hers on this assignment, and the little menace has talent. She said the threading was an artistic statement when Shredder asked her.

She, Wheelie (SEE PAGE 65), and Shredder (SEE PAGE 64) have set up a skate park on the ground floor of the clubhouse, and they're usually hanging out there together or trying to encourage Blades (SEE PAGE 58) to show off for them.

IZZY

Future Audio Tech

Born Israel Octavius to a competent Medtech who works out of the Crisis Medical Center in Old Japantown. Izzy inherited their mother's appreciation for engineering, but they prefer to focus on audio tech, rather than bio. They're quite stealthy for someone who loves noise and music as much as they do, although part of that may be a prankster's instinct for mischief. They're quite close with Lookout (SEE PAGE 63) – I believe their parents know each other – and have been experimenting with making beat poetry with Hi-Stick (SEE PAGE 61) and Wheelie (SEE PAGE 65).

Their mother is busy with work most of the time, so they're free to run about doing whatever as long as they show up for family meals on Thursdays, which is typically the two of them sharing some Prepak and chatting while watching an Addiswood soap opera. Izzy's mother is also happy to encourage her little menace to take bits and bobs earmarked by the Medical Center for the trash, so Izzy is a source of bargain basement medical supplies for Generation Red.

Apex (SEE PAGE 59) and Izzy collaborated on the booby-traps serving as the first line of defense for the clubhouse – Apex is more practiced, but Izzy has some clever ideas.

Born Chloe Yannatou. She has a better relationship with her Corp parents than Apex (SEE PAGE 59) does, but they don't seem to be upset about their daughter spending so much time on her own. I don't have the specifics on what her parents actually do for Ziggurat, but I have some suspicions – Lookout's forgery skill didn't spring fully-formed from her thirteen-year-old head. She's a quiet one, most of the time, but she's always listening.

Nearly caught me once, actually. Little menace. Her attentiveness makes her an excellent sentry, and that's her official position in Generation Red. As much as they have official positions.

Lookout's another artist in a gang full of them, though she tends towards spray paint instead of poetry. She's done quite a bit of decorating at the clubhouse, and I suspect Generation Red's logo is her handiwork, based off of one of Apex's ideas.

She and Apex are close friends, and Lookout helped Apex escape her family and get the clubhouse set up for habitability. They still spend a lot of time together, enjoying each other's company and planning for the future.

If you wanted to get Apex on board with an idea, Lookout's the one to convince first.

SHREDDER

Skateboarding Streetrat

Birth name unknown, Shredder's an orphan with Edgerunner parents. They actually cared for her, right until they got flat-lined on a job. She scrounged for a year or two, then fell head over heels for Hi-Stick (SEE PAGE 61) when she saw her knock down a kid twice her size while scoring a goal during a street hockey match. Shredder managed to introduce herself without stuttering too much, and was quickly adopted into Generation Red.

Shredder, Wheelie (SEE PAGE 63), and Hi-Stick worked together to transform the ground floor of Generation Red's clubhouse into a skate park, where they're often found practicing their tricks.

Shredder also knows how to sew. She fixes clothes for the gang and is trusted to perform surgery on Hi-Stick's stuffed animals. Shredder is a bit rough around the edges, no doubt, but she's opening up to her gang like they're family, slowly but surely.

She's probably the one who least wants to see arguments among the others, doubtless out of a fear of losing the one place she feels like she belongs.

Shredder isn't a particularly practiced peacemaker, but her attempts to get the others to "quit bitching and do something fun" has defused the odd squabble or two before.

WHEELIE

Heir to the Kibble Alternative

Born Hiroki Nishioka. Yes, his parents were the Nishiokas working to develop a Kibble alternative. The ones who died in a tragic and, in my professional opinion, manufactured car crash when Wheelie was about six. He was in the car with them, which is how he lost his arm.

His brother stepped up to look after him, and although they get along, they have a lot of unresolved feelings about the crash and their situation.

Tetra (SEE PAGE 60), who was happy to hang out with Wheelie while their parents talked shop, kept him from retreating completely, but Wheelie got involved with Generation Red through Hi-Stick (SEE PAGE 61); they share an interest in poetry. Wheelie hasn't entered any competitions, but in my inexpert opinion his poems are competition-worthy – Wheelie is just very cautious about drawing attention to himself.

If he has similar suspicions about the death of his parents as I do, lying low might be the safest option for him, just in case Continental Brands gets any ideas about hidden research caches. He comes out of his shell more around Generation Red, and especially around Hi-Stick, Shredder (SEE PAGE 64), and Tetra, who he's closest to.

Talk to Your Players

Child endangerment's a line for many people. Before you add kids to your campaign and put them in mortal danger – and mortal danger is a constant in Cyberpunk – we recommend talking to your Players and finding out their thoughts on the matter.

Is it alright to include kids so long as they aren't in danger? Is danger alright so long as the consequences aren't too dire or the Crew has a chance to save the kids? Should kids be left out entirely?

Gaming is about having fun, and if a Player feels nothing but discomfort and dread because the Maelstrom picked a local YoGang as their next target, they're probably not having much fun. So, talk to your Players. Get their thoughts and plan accordingly.

Kids in Night City

You can't show Night City as a living, breathing city and pretend kids don't exist there. Of course they do. No matter the problems plaguing the world, humanity persists and makes more humans. Life, as someone once said, finds a way. In other words, yes Virginia, there are kids in Night City. That's especially true on the top rungs of the economic ladder, where having children is an affordable luxury, and the bottom rungs, where the option not to have children is an unaffordable luxury.

Fair warning, this won't be a bright, cheerful bit of text to read.

YoGangs

Like adults, kids forced to live on The Street band together for survival; not that it helps their chances much. Youth Gangs, also known as YoGangs, rarely last for long. In the crucible of The Street, YoGangs just can't match the firepower or strength of older, more ruthless – and often more cyberpsycho – gangs. And that's not counting the toll problems rising from poverty – like disease, malnutrition, and lack of resources – take on their membership.

Living on The Street is challenging for anyone but for a kid? The odds of making it to eighteen aren't good.

Still, some YoGangs do survive, often with an ever-shifting membership as older kids age out or die and new kids join up. Some, like the Andersons (SEE BLACK CHROME PAGE 140), survive due to the patronage and leadership of a capable older teen or adult. Others, like the Lost Kids (SEE TALES OF THE RED: STREET STORIES PAGE 136), form groups akin to localized Nomad Packs, traveling from spot to spot in the city and squatting in spaces most adults can't or won't go. And still others, like Generation Red, hit a sweet spot: capable kids from multiple backgrounds helped along by access to decent tech. Don't be fooled though. Even though Generation Red drove off an attack by a group of adult gangers hoping to claim their base, they wouldn't last long against a threat like the NCPD or Militech. If another bigger, badder group decided they wanted the building, it wouldn't matter how many rocket launchers Tetra (SEE PAGE 60) liberated from her parents' weapon closet. Without help, the kids would lose the fight and maybe their lives.

Kids as Allies

Many people feel an instinctive need to protect or help kids – or at least not hurt them – so there's a good chance if a YoGang shows up in a campaign, they'll do so as potential allies. More cynical Edgerunners might make use of the kids much as Sherlock Holmes did the Baker Street Irregulars: to help them gather information or run errands. More kind-hearted Edgerunners, on the other hand, might bond with the kids. Helping the kids out could become a plot point, great for creating a job or three. Better yet, it could become a motivational force for the Crew, working to create deeper and better-rounded Characters who exist as more than the missions they go on, the chrome they implant, and the guns they fire.

Kids as Enemies

We hope your Edgerunners aren't the sort to run around slaughtering kids but it is possible a YoGang might end up opposing a Crew. Having to go up against a group of kids works best not as a straight-up fight but as an ethical dilemma. For example, say a Fixer hired the Crew to grab some prewar tech from a specific building. They scope the place out, only to discover a squatting YoGang considers the tech theirs.

What's a group of big, tough Edgerunners to do? The wrinkle adds pathos to the story, making it more interesting than a basic snatch-and-grab.

MAELSTROM

Prepared by Linda "Overpass" Lucastra (undercover at the Totentanz)

Maelstrom clawed their way through the 4th Corporate War and reconstruction much as Night City did: scarred, battered, but fiercely alive. And like the city, bright new chrome is replacing burned steel. Before the War, Maelstrom was a middle-grade boostergang. Today, they're growing in power and influence through a flourishing drug and cybernetic trade.

Maelstrom also leads the other gangs in salvaging valuable gear from the Hot Zone using hordes of scavvers willing to get cancer for a shot at membership and some shiny metal. Maelstrom looks to have a long, bloody future ahead of it.

Base of Operations

In 2023, Maelstrom lost their entire territory to the Arasaka Tower nuke. The neighborhood around the abandoned department store they called home survived the blast, but raging fires swept through the area and brought it all down. Totentanz, Burleson Tower Hotel's legendary booster slam-bar (which the Maelstrommers called their second home) was also badly damaged.

Maelstrom's survivors stabilized the building, re-opened the bar, and moved themselves into the middle floors of the old hotel. Today the gang holds court in a ballroom there. Burned-out chrome from the Fallen covers one entire wall, including the mummified corpse of their former leader, Hammer, killed after the Nuke. It's considered a mark of honor among members to wear "old chrome" with visible Nuke scars.

Recent History

Maelstrom began with and continues to build itself on cast-offs and survivors of other gangs. It was only blind luck that a condo tower shielded the gang's old headquarters from the worst of the Nuke.

Even so, many of the most heavily cybered members died in a weird (survivors claim EMP-induced) frenzy of hyper-violence immediately following the explosion.

The survivors fought on, absorbing remnants of other high-chrome gangs during the Recovery. Warlock, the gang's current leader, has forged Maelstrom's best and most ruthless members into a productive core that runs its businesses while he uses its rank and file to wreck competitors.

DATA

To learn more about the infamous Night City Nuke of 2023 see CP:R PAGE 292.

Resources

Maelstrom controls a drug-trafficking network, which also moves reclaimed weapons and technology. They run packs of disposable wannabe gangers who scavenge the Hot Zone wreckage for valuable equipment of all kinds, but especially cyberware. They have deals with many ripperdocs across the city, trading cheap parts for discounted service.

Of course, the gang has a strong presence at Totentanz, with their headquarters and garage in the same building.

DATA

You can learn more about the Hot Zone on CP:R PAGE 297.

Goals

Maelstrom's rank and file members work the gang's drug or cyberware trade to advance and earn drinking money or credit with allied ripperdocs.

Warlock, their leader, has longer-term ambitions. He wants a new permanent home for Totentanz and the gang. Between his drive and the gang's strong trade network, they stand to own a real piece of the city's underworld in the future.

And, of course, Maelstrom is still a gang, so "Chrome, Smash, Dance, and Bash" is still popular with all members.

Side note? Every single Maelstrom member will set aside all other business to stomp any Inquisitors they come across.

There's decades of bad blood on both sides.

DATA

For more information on the Totentanz, see CP:R PAGE 310.

DATA

Want to know more about the Inquisitors? See CP:R PAGE 308.

CRUSHER

Cyberpsycho Urban Legend

Crusher became Maelstrom's leader when its founder, Hammer, died in the gang's "Nuke Frenzy" after Arasaka Tower fell. He rallied the gang's survivors to fight through the wreckage of the burning city to the Burleson Tower Hotel and Totentanz. He dueled the Warrior Heart's gang leader for the hotel floors that serve as Maelstrom's headquarters today.

He and other survivors stabilized the Totentanz's structure with rubble and salvaged construction gear. Maelstrom, held the building against looters, end-of-world types, and even soldiers from various sides. Often, Crusher headed the charge. With all his cyberware still working, he was one of the most dangerous people in the city.

But something broke in Crusher as the city burned. In 2027, during a cyberpsychotic episode, he slaughtered a StormTech convoy and disappeared into the Hot Zone.

Since then he's made seemingly random reappearances, like the gang's personal angry god. Sometimes it's to join Maelstrom's battles. Sometimes it's to beat down the gang's current members while cryptically ranting. I can't figure out how he dodges MAX-TAC, let alone to where he vanishes to. Wherever it is must have spare parts.

WARLOCK

Maelstrom Warlord

Warlock looks like a typical disposable 'ganger chump at first glance, to the point of being mistaken for muscle occasionally at meetings. Yet, he wields a surprising range of knowledge, social awareness, and presence effectively to drive his agenda and win deals, even with Corporate agents. Meanwhile, his foot soldiers build the gang's reputation for messy hyperviolence and creepy rituals.

Warlock learned leadership under a legend: he joined the gang as a kid in the chaos of a city still smoldering as Crusher (SEE PAGE 68) kept the gang alive and secure. When Crusher's successor, Hextra, earned herself a 30mm brain piercing from MAX-TAC, Warlock took the reins with Quake (SEE PAGE 71) and Flenser (SEE PAGE 72) backing him up.

Warlock organized the wannabes who hung around Totentanz into one of the best scav forces working the Hot Zone. He consolidated the gang's grasp on Totentanz as well. Every boosterganger is still welcome (in the same "come get stabbed" sense as always), but Maelstrom literally keeps the building standing.

Warlock purposefully makes Maelstrom look chaotic from outside, but his core teams operate methodically, enacting his long-term plans. If Warlock lasts, Maelstrom could wield real power in Night City.

THE PIT

Pet Cyberpsycho

Way down in the sub-sub-basement of the Burleson Tower, full of cracked concrete and forgotten machinery, a monster stalks. They call it The Pit. The gang uses this hulking ball of grafted meat and metal to entertain and to punish. It used to be human. I wouldn't say it is anymore.

I'm not kidding. I've done ride-alongs with MAX-TAC. I've seen them put down cyberpsychos charging through buildings and crowds like a kaiju stomping across a city.

This thing's beyond that. It's straight from a braindance horror sim. They throw people down there to fight it. It stalks them before it kills them. Nobody wins.

It believes it's a monster. Joe Pitt (SEE PAGE 73) had to bolt a mask on the thing a few years back because eating the victims was making it sick. Meanwhile, gangers from Totentanz stand around watching and yelling "Feed 'em to The Pit!" like it's funny!

I have nightmares where I'm in the dark down there and I can hear its breathing over the hum of the jacks supporting the building, and it's getting closer. If I thought I could, I'd put a bullet through its brain before you exfiltrate me.

The world would be better off. I know I'd sleep better at night.

QUAKE

Lord of the Hammer

The literal "mailed fist" of Maelstrom is a big, scarred, blunt instrument of a guy named Quake. While he's not stupid, he knows his limits. Quake trusts Warlock (SEE PAGE 69) implicitly and follows his lead. In return, Warlock makes sure Quake gets to lead the gang's rabble in lots of riots and throwdowns, especially against the Inquisitors.

Some gangers gear up to fight fellow chromers. Quake specializes in "chewing up meat," as he calls it. Everything about him — the massive, customized hammer and built-in revolver, his deliberately chunky linear frame, his glossy black leathers, and the red underlighting built into all of them — is there to draw in anti-cyberware extremists.

Everyone in Maelstrom's lost people to Inquisitor ambushes. Quake's their avenger. He doesn't just kill, he terrifies. The rest of the crew blocks a band of Inquisitors into a vacant lot or building while Quake singlehandedly tears them apart.

I saw him pull a guy into a storm drain by his ankle. Through the grate.

Low-level members are adopting Quake's style. Not just the leathers and red lights, either – but the messy killings, too. We could be seeing the start of outright war.

FLENSER

Maelstrom Intelligence Expert

Quake (SEE PAGE 71) is a mace. Flenser's a stiletto. In a gang known for roaring brawls and armored heavyweights, Warlock's (SEE PAGE 69) other lieutenant is a stealthy, patient, clever spy. The role Warlock sets for Flenser is the best evidence of his cunning. She stalks other gangs, deducing their patterns, scouting their resources, and stealing their secrets.

Though plenty deadly, Flenser rarely fights directly. Warlock keeps her profile intentionally low. She hangs at Totentanz sometimes but keeps to the back. I don't think the other gangs even know why they keep missing kills and losing shipments and I have evidence she's breached some government and NeoCorp systems.

She gets in through rooftops. She crawls through utility tunnels. She's even packed herself into cargo pods. Once inside, she hits and fades before the targets even know she's there.

Warlock uses Flenser's data sparingly, but several of the gang's recent big wins (notably the Red Chrome beat down and the Steel Vaquero deal) hinged on her efforts.

Flenser also protects Maelstrom's own secrets. Gangers' Agents run the latest security software, their floors in Burleson Tower have strong locks and good surveillance, and no doombas or addicts get keys to anything important. She was the biggest obstacle to compiling this brief.

JOE PITT

Maelstrom Tech Guru

The gang's resident engineer and tech lead. When he joined, shoring up Burleson Tower was a constant dozen-person effort. Joe built active servo-hydraulic supports that he runs almost alone. Pitt also installs Flenser's security gadgets (SEE PAGE 72), maintains cyberware and weapons, keeps Totentanz's deafening sound system running, and even tunes other ganger's bikes.

Pitt's handle comes from some ancient book series about a vampire detective stuck doing the aristocracy's shit work, which encapsulates his personality. While the gang does actually take his skills for granted, Joe was always opinionated, sullen, and self-righteous. He does extra work, then complains when it's not noticed. He grumbles at every assignment. He sits in the back at Totentanz sipping "blood" (some horrible, red-colored "gin") and avoiding conversation, except to discuss how "Warlock's pet monster" (SEE PAGE 70) stole his handle. Joe's a hard guy to like, but he truly cares about Maelstrom.

Burleson Tower couldn't have lasted without his improvements. Maelstrom core members never worry about their gear crapping out. The weirdest demonstration of his love comes in the form of squealing. To keep MAX-TAC from descending on them like avenging angels, Pitt reports gangers whose psychosis gets truly dangerous to an NCPD officer named Mauser (SEE PAGE 81). In return, Mauser does his best to scoop up the psychos before they make headlines and catch Hammerman's attention. Risky!

RIPPER

True Believer

Ripper rose to leadership when Maelstrom's scavver army needed a full-time organizer. Of all Warlock's decisions (SEE PAGE 69), this is the one most likely to bite him.

Ripper was a typical street enforcer with a good rep and Quake (SEE PAGE 71) sponsored him for this role. As an enforcer under Quake, Ripper's sadism pointed outward: disemboweling Inquisitors, slicing parts off deadbeats, dragging traitors behind his van for a "chat." But his new job, herding disposable streetrats to work in radioactive deathtraps, offers even better opportunities for cruelty.

Ripper entices his scavvers with the chance to earn membership in the Maelstrom. And they might — maybe one in twenty survive and graduate to the big leagues. As for the rest, some resurface on The Street or elsewhere, but a frightening number (and higher than Ripper reports to Warlock) journey into the Hot Zone and never come out. Even the "winners" bear scars. Ripper's developed pseudo-mystical "Tests," rituals for scavvers on the cusp of graduating.

Ripper makes Maelstrom bank, and Quake likes how Ripper's wannabe gangers idolize him. But his trail of cast-off corpses might sink the gang one day. Or Ripper might decide he's better off making all the decisions, take his streetrats, and split off into his own gang.

Drop's a good example of Maelstrom's mid-tier personnel. Drop dresses like a Central Am vet thirty years older than they are, with some road gang chic thrown in for extra edge. They're lightly cybered, so far, having spent their hard earned ebs on the best cybereyes they could afford.

Drop works Burleson Tower's sniper nests, carrying a cheap knockoff of a more reliable NeoSov AR with a decent-quality scope bolted on. Kid's from South Night City and their sibling, FreeFall (SEE PAGE 136), is a leading Zoner. Drop laughs off any idealist politics.

While Drop's earned a reputation as a good shot, they dream of being on some elite HALO commando squad. Every third word they speak is sniper slang (cold barrel zero, lock times, rate of twist) that's absurdly out of scope for a weedy doomba with a 3D-printed rifle that rattles in the breeze.

Drop's next goal is interface plugs and speedware, custom-tweaked for sniping. Their biggest dream, the one they'll talk your ear off about? Getting a Tsunami Arms RJ85 ramjet sniper rifle. "Shoot from here, put a round through a doomba's eye in Heywood!" They'll be lucky to own a ramjet bullet, much less the whole gun.

RAGUEL

Recent Convert

The biggest surprise in my investigation was running facial recognition on my videos and finding an Inquisitor had infiltrated the Heart of the Metal Devil and then been corrupted by it. Raguel dropped off the radar in a NeoLuddite fascist colony outside Portland last year and popped up in Night City with cheap, flashy gear and a quick-and-dirty eye implant. Poser looks aside, he worked hard dealing and street fighting to get into the Maelstrom.

He's a full member, if low-level, though he hasn't made many friends because of his creepy Chosen One vibe. Acting as a spy at first, Raguel faithfully dead-dropped gang secrets to his Inquisitor bosses for the first six months.

After he got his new arms, though, he stopped.

I think the little lightweight went cyberpsycho and changed "religions." He talks about the rituals Quake (SEE PAGE 71) and Ripper (SEE PAGE 74) run like they mean something. He points to his cybereye and says, "Sometimes you have to cut until you see the truth!" There's no bigger zealot than a fresh convert.

Either he's going to slip up and get torn to bits or Quake will put him in charge of the next big Inquisitor purge, which should be a hell of a thing to watch.

GHOUL

Bottom of the Barrel

You wanted an example of Maelstrom's newer recruits so here you go. Ghoul signed up at eighteen as a Hot Zone scavver named Digger. After surviving irradiation, two tunnel collapses, and nanoswarm poisoning, he caught his boss's attention by digging up a big haul of Kiroshi optics.

As a reward, Ripper (SEE PAGE 74) worked him harder but the scavver held up under the strain. That's when Ripper set his first "Test:" Digger could only eat what he caught in the Hot Zone without help. After watching the streetrat cook and eat a carcass of some weird, irradiated monster of a thing, Ripper gave Digger his new handle: Ghoul.

For his final Test, Ripper offered Ghoul a carbon-crystal fighting knife. Only after grasping it did he realize Ripper'd heated it with a blowtorch first. When the streetrat jerked his smoking hand back, the knife fell into a pan of molten aluminum.

"I give you a gift and you drop it?" Ripper said. "Fish it out. No tools. Just your hand."

It took the streetrat two tries and a lot of screaming before he graduated to Maelstrom membership, with a replacement hand and arm. He kept the knife.

A lot of the new Maelstrom members are like this: horribly messed up by both the world and the gang. Like Totentanz, Maelstrom's standing on wreckage. It'll only last if Warlock (SEE PAGE 69) gets it all onto solid ground.

NCPD PRECINCT #1

Prepared by Ramsey "Roxy" Cole (former* Night City Today *reporter)

The official Night City Police Department is overworked, understaffed, and corrupt as hell. That said, not every Lawman is looking for extra eb, and sometimes they're the Thin Blue Line you need when things go ballistic. Here's some of the city's finest with an eye toward who to tap and who to tag.

City Police Precinct #1, or the 1st Precinct, covers Central Night City (the "Island"), employs over two thousand officers, and is divided into nine sectors. Despite all the Corp-cops and private contractors claiming their pieces of turf, the NCPD has jurisdiction everywhere in Night City, even if they only directly police a few sectors. NCPD also has the best investigators in the city... after Danger Gal, of course. And since their jails are the only legal long-term holding facilities in town no matter who arrests you? Sooner or later you'll end up in NCPD's custody. Assuming you avoid being killed while "resisting arrest" of course.

Base of Operations

The 1st Precinct House is a huge bunker near where the Glen borders the Old Combat Zone and Old Japantown. Each sector has its own station house, varying in size and style depending on local affluence and threat levels. Most station houses have their own communications center with access to the NCPD database, holding cells, armory, a drone rookery, and vehicles, but only the main Precinct House has facilities for AVs, copters, and the TAC Squad's armored vehicles. Some sectors also have additional substations which are basically sheds with a comms center and a break room.

Recent History

Like the rest of this battered burg, the NCPD has been putting itself back together for the last twenty years. It struggled to restore order in the aftermath of the Nuke, especially after Hammerman stole away MAX-TAC, but at least the Corporations weren't muscling in.

The PD was building itself back into an authority on The Street: The gangs, at least in more affluent areas, were being partially contained, understandings were struck with the Nomad Families, rebuilding was accelerating, and (some) neighborhoods began to see their tax dollars at work.

But now the Corps are slithering back, buying officials and officers like they came out of a Vendit. Private security forces are being "deputized" in many sectors by City Managers, gangs are getting funded like private armies, and taxes and Night Corp aid money is being shunted to Corporate-favored projects, leaving the police scrambling for resources. It's the Bad Old Days all over again.

Resources

Lawmen have access to basic handguns, shoulder arms, armor, and gear, all of which can be requisitioned given approval. However heavy weapons only go to the TAC Squads in most circumstances. Patrol cars are assigned on a rotation or as needed basis. Of course, stations in certain sectors have better vehicles, weapons, and Corporate "donations" of special equipment. Those bordering – or worse, in – Combat Zones will often have poorer quality gear but lots of it.

The Department has been known to "requisition" items from crime scenes and suspects to sell, getting a fair portion of their budget through the seizure of goods. Many cops are happy to do this for themselves as well.

Goals

As a whole, the NCPD wants full control of policing in Night City, providing law enforcement without special interest interference. Don't hold your breath on that. Of course, while some Lawmen actually sign up to "serve and protect", each cop has their own agenda, and the longer they've been serving and protecting, the more likely it is their interests have turned... personal.

DATA

To learn more about Hammerman and MAX-TAC, see CP:R PAGE 302.

DATA

NCPD Precinct #1 covers Little Europe, the Hot Zone, most of the Upper Marina, University District, South Night City, The Glen, Old Combat Zone, Old Japantown, and Little China.

South Night City, Old Combat Zone, Old Japantown, and Little China see significantly less police presence than the others.

DATA

More information about the 1st Precinct House is in the core rulebook. See CP:R PAGE 311.

CALIBER

Sergeant Alexander Marconi

Sergeant Marconi is an enigma. His file describes a consummate professional with an excellent kill record: 34 out of 36 shots taken. Fellow officers value having him on overwatch and his sniper data set (DOPE) is solid. The problem is he's too perfect. He's a loner, which isn't too unusual for a sharpshooter, but he refuses to even use a spotter, which violates TAC policy.

The fact that he gets away with it means someone's been bought. Combine it all with Marconi having little to no social life and things get even juicier: this combination should normally have triggered a psych evaluation, but there's none in his jacket.

Casting my net a little further, I turned up some disturbing data: there have been at least twelve unsolved assassinations in the Precinct #1 area since Caliber came to the NCPD. Their shared M.O. is always of clean, long-range, single shots. Is Caliber's real tally 46 out of 48? I'm thinking he might be a deep plant: an assassin in police clothing. But who put him here: Arasaka? Lazarus? The Free State of Texas?

I'm not sure, and I'm actually worried. If the wrong people know I have this file I might be target 49.

I hate enigmas.

Like his namesake, once Bill Mauser is on a case, he does not let go. Utterly incorruptible, he's the kind you follow from a distance, noting what he digs up even as you avoid getting in his way. He typically uses his brains before his gun but will definitely resort to strong-arm tactics to loosen lips when necessary.

His focus is investigating high-level crime such as serial killers, potential cyberpsychos, and the like, and his success record is good enough that any minor infractions tend to get buried.

If he thinks you're interfering with an investigation, he'll have you barred from every crime scene in the Precinct #1. And if that doesn't work, he'll see to you personally: at least one operative has been rendered "temporarily inactive" after Mauser confronted them. Like I said. Minor infractions get buried.

Based on his records, I suspect that Detective Mauser is fighting against some sort of obsessive cyberpsychosis, but his medical file is strangely redacted. There are some vague notes about an implanted Agent with "therapeutic programming" but I can't find much else. This suggests that, despite his past victories, Mauser may be turning into what he's always fought against.

ESCOBAR

Detective Philip Escobar

Phillip Escobar is an INTERPOL agent with the Fugitive Investigative Support Division, working alongside the NCPD on cases involving criminals moving across international borders. After all, Night City is the Pacifica Confederation's Casablanca, and INTERPOL wants a face man here. He has been involved in several investigations involving Corporate felons and other malfeasance. He doesn't always come out on NCPD's good side but he always looks sharp for the cameras.

As a man of the world, Phillip truly understands quid pro quo. While not exactly corrupt, he won't hesitate to cut deals and share data to further his investigations, probably because INTERPOL's juice is severely limited out here at the edge of civilization. He can be a great source of information, especially with his connections at the National Central Bureau... so long as you have something he needs in exchange, like somewhere to dispose of a body. I'm sure that he's quietly flatlined a few "problems" here for his superiors. Extradition can be so complicated.

Gracious, if a bit slick, he's managed to keep the heat off himself so far, but he might get rotated elsewhere if too many questions point his way.

He's also a hell of a dancer.

GRINDER

Lieutenant Jessie Brasso

Lieutenant Brasso has led the Precinct #1's TAC Squad for over two years now (that's almost twenty in cop years). Not nearly as tricked out as MAX-TAC, NCPD's TAC Squad has done its best to deal with heavily armed gangers and cyberpsychos... often with mixed results and high casualty rates.

When he took over, Brasso implemented a rigorous training regimen, working to increase TAC officer effectiveness and survivability. Brasso leads the exercises himself, hence his handle.

In the field, his cool-headedness has saved more than a few lives even though he's been accused by his superiors of being "insufficiently aggressive." His TAC officers tell me that, since so much unpredictable tech is hitting The Street these days, Brasso always takes time to assess his opponents' capabilities before engaging. Despite some claiming cowardice, most love his ass. Yellow stripe or prudent caution? You decide.

All this has caught the eye of MAX-TAC (SEE CP:R PAGE 302), who've recently offered Brasso a job. But my read is Brasso thinks Hammerman's a traitor for going mercenary. The fact that Brasso hasn't responded to the offer has me wondering: what's he planning and how can we use that?

CAVALRY

Officer Suri Navarro

Officer Navarro is as close to the cop ideal as you're going to get in the Precinct #1: honest, a believer in the public trust, and something of an icon to her fellow officers. Cavalry earned her handle and her cred being the first on scene to a whole lot of Officer Down calls.

Yet, while she's been in the Patrol Division for over five years, she hasn't bought into the toxic perspective so many Lawmen develop after time in the field. She still believes in the work, and she's damned good at it.

She's also a realist and will cooperate with outside agencies, although she stays frustratingly within the straight and narrow. When it comes down to brass tacks, she'll probably have your back in a firefight and then arrest you for any needless property damage afterwards.

But as shiny as Cavalry seems, she does have a crack in her chrome: Her wife's gambling problem has put her family in serious debt. Seems her mainline can't stay off the virtual card tables and might have a debt to a Fixer named Rex Royale. Is Cavalry's cooperation worth compromising a rare good cop? I recommend no.

Cavalry is more of an "In An Emergency, Break Glass" kind of asset. Use with care.

GOLDEN BOY

Officer Dennis Gant

You've probably heard of Golden Boy, even if you don't know it. Officer Gant has become something of a media darling, thanks to his good looks and action-hero mentality. He's recently been featured in screamsheets citywide for a whole series of exploits.

These include a dash into the Old Combat Zone to rescue a stranded Nomad family and a firefight in the University District that ended a kidnapping operation. Great front-screen stuff! I even interviewed him once – he's pretty but a bit twitchy.

Gant is a serious adrenaline junkie; he lives for the jag being an "Extreme Lawman" gives him. His jacket confirms he once had a synthcoke habit, and that's an easy hole to fall back into. He's demonstrated decent street skills but seems driven to actually live out every action Braindance he's ever chipped. His reckless impulses have garnered him fame but at serious risk to himself, and several innocent bystanders have been injured during his "adventures."

Golden Boy's superiors have quietly taken him off active patrol and put him under close supervision, working public relations in the Upper Marina District. Naturally, he'll do anything to get back on The Street. Anything. Make of that what you will but be prepared to accept the consequences.

SARGE

Sergeant Titus Malloy

Sergeant Malloy has been an NCPD cop for over thirty years, which means he predates the Nuke and served throughout the reconstruction of this scarred city. During that time, he's built a decent rep as someone who knows the score.

He looks out for his officers, is good for the occasional favor or cover up (as long as it's not too serious), and is on good terms with several gangs and as well as a couple of Corporations. And by "good terms", I mean he's taken a whole lot of eb from them.

And best of all, Sarge is our guy, bought and paid for, and the inside source for much of the classified data I have on Precinct #1 personnel. Nearing retirement, he's got quite the golden parachute prepared, built from payoffs and items "missing" from the precinct's evidence lockers. That's not to say Sarge is seriously criminal – just pragmatic.

My sources tell me he recently sent a patrol unit to investigate the theft of a personal shipment, but Officer Warren (SEE PAGE 89) got a bit overzealous in her interrogation of the Nomad suspects. That's seriously pissed off the local Clans and they might be looking for payback.

Normally, Sarge does favors for us but maybe he's the one who needs a favor now.

SHEPARD

Officer Elena Korda

Officer Korda is a strange one, and in Night City, that's saying something. One of eight K-9 units assigned to Precinct #1, she and her dog Gustav are an inseparable team. If I didn't have her medical files, I'd assume they were directly cyber-linked, but she seems to track his cybercam through her Chyron and communicates with him via Agent. I'm not sure she ever breaks that connection, even off duty.

Her jacket says she's a widow: Cop husband died in the line of duty. That could explain a lot.

Her canine partner, Gustav (SEE PAGE 88), is primarily a Gun Dog, trained to locate weapon propellants and explosives. While the pair do patrol together, they're also called in to search for weapon caches when a site is designated "dog-worthy." They've got a good record for turning over ganger stockpiles and locating bombs before they detonate. The latter got them some face-time on Night City Today's Garden Patch, where I interviewed them.

I think the dog spoke more words than she did.

Can she be useful to Danger Gal? I honestly don't know. She's a bit of a closed book. But whatever you do, do not threaten the dog in front of Korda. Ever.

Don't say I didn't warn you.

GUSTAV

Custom Security Canine

Before the 4th Corporate War, Biotechnica's biological security and utility animal projects competed poorly against electronic-based rivals such as Adrek Robotics and LawTech Unlimited. In a world rebuilding after the War, however, the world's premier biotechnology company has pushed hard to fill niches vacated by damaged and destroyed rivals.

One of Biotechnica's greatest successes in biological security and utility is a revamp of the Digital Watchdog. Born from Nicolo Loggagia's vision of a less-chromed world, the modern version of this classic offering has been redesigned from the genetic level up and rebranded as the Custom Security Canine or CSC. Biotechnica offers CSCs configured for many tasks, from traditional sentry duty to crowd control. Every CSC is upgraded with cyberware to ensure they stay focused on their duty and perform beyond the ability of their non-augmented counterparts.

Gustav represents the Gun Dog subbrand of the CSC line. Biotechnica augmented his olfactory senses utilizing genetic engineering and cybernetic enhancement. In addition, an Internal Agent and MicroVideo camera ensure his handler, Officer Elena Korda (SEE PAGE 87), can issue commands and track Gustav's progress no matter how far apart they are. To keep Gustav safe from criminals, vehicles, and other hazards, Officer Korda outfitted Gustav with the latest in canine-specific armor.

Officer Judy Warren

A recent Training Program graduate, Warren became a cop so she could legally pound on people if they didn't do what she told them to. A muscle-minded thug with a badge, her favorite assignment is, naturally, riot duty. She knocked a lot of heads during the recent Zoners (SEE PAGE 131) protest.

Known as a smack talker around her station house, her informal handle has become Bullshit, and she already has a couple of Excessive Force write-ups. Given how much force it takes for NCPD to bother writing you up? That's telling you something.

Her recent acquisition of Muscle and Bone Lace augmentation also sent up some red flags, but the department seems willing to overlook it given how short-handed it is. There's no indication of how she paid for such a premium chrome, which means she's probably in hock to somebody. Given that her jacket shows suspected links to the Red Chrome Legion (SEE CP:R PAGE 309), they're my bet. And her med file indicates chronic use of painkillers since the operation. Perhaps her new body needs some retooling?

Sarge (SEE PAGE 86) shared that Warren has already taken some minor tributes from locals and is certainly open to bribery to help her pay off her cyberware. Unfortunately, he also used Pitbull to retrieve some "lost goods" from the Sightseers Nomad Pack (SEE PAGE 99), which resulted in her beating one of them near to death. This put the Nomads on the warpath, so her marketability may be at an all-time low.

CHERUB

Officer Ranbir Majumdar

Officer Majumdar is fresh out of the mold, having just graduated from the NCPD Training Program a month ago. As such, he's bright-eyed and chock full of cliché ideas about "making a difference" and "serving the public."

He's been put on patrol in the University District to help him find his Street Legs, but he's already had some dust-ups with private security. Note that he's got a bit of a chip on his shoulder regarding "rent-a-cops", which might extend to Danger Gal operatives, especially those working in the private security sector.

Still, he's displayed some good skills so far, being quick to back up his partners. There are two incidents of freezing up in his jacket, which might just be freshman jitters, but, if he gets three, I'd worry about a pattern. At least he hasn't shot any bystanders yet.

But all his naivete can be put to use if you can convince him that cooperating with Danger Gal will further the public good. We might see if we can arrange to assign Officer Majumdar to Officer Navarro (SEE PAGE 84) in order to cultivate his idealism.

I think it's important to keep this kid out of trouble... at least until he's properly groomed. And any leverage we use should be all public-spirit carrot, no stick.

NETWORK 54

Prepared by Cherri P.I. (Associate Investigator)

Alright, cuties, strap yourselves in for some juicy details on Net54's most elite investigative journalism squad, run by none other than legendary Media, Fiona Hayes (SEE PAGE 92). This award-winning team is responsible for breaking some of the biggest stories of corruption in Night City history.

Fiona's career spans thirty plus years! That's damn impressive for a Media with many powerful enemies, all of whom would pay good eb to see her flatlined.

Base of Operations

Although Net54's main headquarters are in Santa Fe, New Mexico, Fiona and her team operate in the Night City Corporate offices located in the New Westbrook. The Net54 Night City public offices look just like what you'd expect any Corporate stooge broadcasting building to be: a large neon sign with catchy headlines run across the length of the building 24 hours a day.

The Corporate building also has many other businesses where you can often find Net54 employees roaming around, like the restaurants and rec center. Fiona's team operates out of a suite of offices on the thirteenth floor.

Recent History

Digging deeper into Net54's darkest archives, we've uncovered a juicy bit of intel: the original Fiona was killed in 2020! Since then, Net54 has replaced her with a string of idealistic young Medias willing to endure the extensive Braindance boot-camp and biosculpting required by the network to carry on the illusion of a single rock star reporter. From Net54's point of view, there's always another "Fiona" waiting to take up the mantle.

The download got even juicier when we discovered Fiona's cameraman, Stringer (SEE PAGE 94), was in love with the previous Fiona and now wants to expose this crazy charade to the whole world.

Meanwhile, Fiona's bodyguard, Angle (SEE PAGE 93), is loyal to the network and will do anything to keep the secret – including killing anyone threatening to expose the lie. He might even kill the current Fiona if it came down to it!

Resources

Net54's signature news van (an armored AV-4) is equipped with all the necessary camera equipment for live broadcasts, including a NET Architecture and five camera-equipped Observer Drones.

Production and research assistants are a quick call away and willing to get any job done on behalf of the network. Fiona has a contact in the NCPD – a Netrunner named Burton Fox who passes along classified police intel.

She also relies on a Fixer specializing in secrets, named Infobros, who seems to have a soft spot for her.

Maybe he's just starstruck?

Goals

Net54 is always at the top of the food chain when it comes to media and reporting, and Fiona and her team intend to keep it that way. Fiona's personal team also works to keep any rumors surrounding Fiona quelled from the spotlight and to quash any controversies surrounding her.

The current Fiona hasn't had the idealism entirely squeezed out of her yet. She honestly wants to hold the rich and powerful accountable for their crimes. At the same time, it's obvious that she knows many of her stories will be censored by the network to protect their various allies.

What Fiona doesn't know is that Net54 uses those same stories to blackmail Execs and Corps for exorbitant fees.

FIONA HAYES

Night City Investigative Powerhouse

Fiona Hayes is a pragmatic and ambitious investigative reporter, and the star of Net54 in Night City. Since the 2010s, she has reported on the most hard-hitting stories, from political scandals to big gang conspiracies. Despite discussing darker topics, her reporting is always vigorous, upbeat, and passionate. People love her perky nature, even in the face of overwhelming tragedy.

Over the years, the rumors on the streets about Fiona have grown, but she's kept the same composure, taglines, and camera presence. This has caused many to wonder if her reports are now just an "act" or if there is something deeper going on behind the scenes. The main rumor opines she is not the "original" Fiona Hayes. And the rumors are, in this case, one hundred percent true!

We haven't been able to dig up information about her life before joining Net54 but the current Fiona has undergone extensive bodysculpting and Braindance training as part of her contract. In fact, the company carefully crafts her image, from her signature catchphrases to her ageless appearance. You've probably heard her trademark sign-offs before, right? "Until next time under the blood red skies." "Night City Awaits!" "Fiona Hayes is on the case." It's all part of the act.

ANGLE

Bodyguard to a Star

Angle acts as Fiona's (SEE PAGE 92) bodyguard, but also serves as her Corporate handler. Ex-Intelligence, he is the picture of a stoic and reserved combat professional. As part of his employment contract, Net54 actively works to suppress his dodgy black ops history. They're happy to do so because of his efficiency and willingness to do whatever it takes to get the job done. And they've done good work!

I've dug deep, and I can't find much information on Angle before he started working for Network 54. His manner and looks suggest he's an old-fashioned Eurosolo, but I've heard rumors from a friend back in the BosWash corridor about a disgraced Secret Service Agent who left the job after being found in bed with their primary. The primary's identity is unknown, but I like to think Angle's been banging the President herself! Makes for a more juicy story.

He keeps his intentions and personal life private from the rest of the team. Neither Fiona nor Stringer (SEE PAGE 94) know he'll happily put a bullet in their brains without hesitation if anything about Net54's string of "Fionas" were to get out.

A man of few words, Angle keeps tabs on everyone Fiona and Stringer interact with. Net54 helps him get in touch with any resources in Night City that can assist him in maintaining his facade.

STRINGER

Camera Jockey in Love

Stringer serves as Fiona's (SEE PAGE 92) cameraman and most trusted confidant. Though employed by Net54 for the past twenty years, he holds a long-standing grudge against the Megacorp.

Stringer started off on camera but his bland looks and delivery translated into poor ratings, so the powers that be forced him through retraining. Amazingly, he took to life outside the spotlight – especially when they assigned him to be the personal camera operator for what we believe to be the second or third Fiona Hayes. He's been with Fiona, no matter which one, ever since.

Stringer fell in love with the last Fiona and, after her death, he swore he would avenge her. He has decided to keep working with the Corp, hoping to find the right moment to expose their secret and show how they've wronged the many "Fionas" they've chewed through the gears of media programming. At times his frustration with Net54 shows, but for the most part he keeps it close to his chest and keeps churning out the news to keep the current Fiona safe.

It's clear Stringer wants to be the hero of this story for Fiona, but unclear which Fiona he'll be loyal to in the end. He may well sacrifice the latest Fiona to avenge the previous one.

PIRANHAS

Prepared by D.R. Ache (Danger Gal Analyst and Event Coordinator)

Can you put a price on bliss? The Piranhas have the cost – and the drugs to give it to you. Whether you need a mile-high party with no budget or the slickest show possible for your gang for only a few Eurobucks, the Piranhas got you. Once known as the grunge garage partiers, the Piranhas have worked their way into becoming the one-stop shop for all things exclusive, shiny, and fucking lit.

Nowadays, there's a Piranha at every party, teeth shining. Wherever a good time is needed, the Piranhas lurk, providing everything anyone could want to guarantee the best night of their lives, transforming the post-scarcity Time of the Red into a neon wonderland.

Base of Operations

The Piranhas used to operate out of a convenience store. But now? The Piranha Palace is a moving refuge for every Piranha, shifting its location on the regular to keep rivals out and party makers in. It may be an abandoned warehouse in one of the Combat Zones one week and a penthouse apartment in the heart of Night City the next. Every shoal leader knows the code to get in, and only Piranhas may enter.

Recent History

Tired of living life on hard mode, Corpse Reviver (SEE PAGE 97) took control of the Piranhas after her predecessor overdosed. Under her leadership, the Piranhas absorbed several other two-bit party gangs, including an attempted retread of the DJs. She brought them all together, embraced their talents, organized them into cells known as "shoals," and introduced the idea of what they would become: the reigning party monarchs of Night City.

For every group she brought in, the Piranhas gained something new: light and sound techs, mixologists, cooks, dancers, and more. Like her namesake, Corpse took the bloody remains of a half-dozen burned-out gangs and raised them into a force capable of conquering the Night City party scene.

Since then, the Piranhas haven't looked back. They take every opportunity to bring in fresh blood from the streets and pull the most influential people into their circles as clients.

Now there isn't a killer party in Night City without a Piranha somewhere in the mix – designer drugs, craft cocktails, entertainment that slams, and the security to keep it all a dirty secret.

Resources

Piranha membership fluctuates constantly, as the party lifestyle chews up some members and attracts others. The top-level leadership, however, stays constant: a crew of young geniuses at the top of their game. Corpse Reviver and her right-hand badass, Bazooka Joe (SEE PAGE 96), recruit from clubs throughout the city.

After years of recruitment and training, the Piranhas boast some of the city's best cooks, dealers, MCs, light and sound crews, mixologists, chefs, VR artists, dancers, security teams, bouncers, adult entertainers, and of course, clean-up crews.

They know that bad shit goes down at parties and they ensure that bad shit doesn't leave a stain.

Goals

Any Piranha would say the goal is to be the only place to party. But Corpse Reviver would tell you it's to create her own fucked-up little family that keeps people like her safe while taking money from the rich leeches to fulfill their wildest (and most boring) dreams. The Piranhas seek out young and wealthy elite to lure them into the party lifestyle, and feed them a steady stream of drugs and fantasies to keep them hooked.

It gives the Piranhas all the leverage they need to stay on top.

BAZOOKA JOE

The Piranha's Teeth

Literally the oldest active Piranha still alive, Bazooka Joe serves as Corpse Reviver's (SEE PAGE 97) right-hand lieutenant and oversees security. Why? Well, let's just say they're in favor of blood, guts, and rock and roll.

Wherever there's violence at a Piranhas party, there's Joe.

Bazooka Joe puts the teeth in Piranhas, and focuses on training new recruits to be good at keeping a party lively – and safe. Not only that, but Joe also focuses on keeping each of the Piranhas safe.

Like a squishy, bloody older sibling, they're a junkyard dog when anyone comes after one of the Piranha's or fucks with one of their events.

Joe's original ties to the Piranhas' pre-Corpse Reviver network gave the gang's leader the starting blocks she needed to build a party empire. And, without Joe's muscle and lust for violence, Corpse Reviver would be a sitting duck for every up-and-comer who wants to take their shot at the big time.

For all Joe has in brawn, Corpse has in brains, and Joe has been an unflinching companion to the boss ever since she came on the scene.

CORPSE REVIVER

Party Queen of Night City

Corpse Reviver has a lot of stories and none of them about where she grew up. The best information on the ground is she came up in one of the Combat Zones. Not buying into the down-and-out poverty storyline, she rebelled against it all by choosing to live a life of fake bliss and unending joy.

Whatever the truth, she roared into the Piranhas like a rebel leader and united those random no-account fuckers, transforming them from a burned-out gang of partiers into the party makers of Night City.

She's a good talker but an even better accountant. Corpse keeps the books clean, the clients satisfied, and the Piranhas invisible to the average doomba.

While Corpse Reviver runs a tight ship, she relies on her lieutenants to keep each part of her system running smoothly. She manages them, they manage the recruits, and she steps in when shit hits the fan.

Whatever issues arise, Corpse works nonstop to raise other kids like herself out of the shittiest parts of the city and gives them jobs. She calls it a big, fucked-up family.

So maybe, beneath all the drugs and music and booze, is someone wanting a palace to call home.

DIRTY SHIRLEY

Creator of Piranha Smash

Dirty Shirley was a cook and dealer on the edge of Night City, peddling her wares to the unhappiest doombas around. They paid for the joy she made with eb, bullets, trade goods, or whatever last remnants of themselves they had. She took it all, saying it was better to make people happy than to make a profit. Shirl wasn't in it for the money. She was there to let these miserable idiots die knowing at least one moment of bliss in their otherwise crap lives.

Then she met Corpse Reviver (SEE PAGE 97). The two ran into each other at a random party. Shirl was meeting her girlfriend while Corpse was running the gig and on the hunt for a new cook after the last one defected to Biotechnica. Shirl was fascinated with everything Corpse promised and signed on without asking a single question.

Shirl's hopeful optimism and general belief in the universal flow guided her into the open jaws of the Piranhas queen and her palace.

Months later, Shirley is the crowning glory of the Piranhas, with designer drugs that carry feelings like no other. In fact, her newest recipe, Piranha Smash, has become the talk of the town. Her talents lie beyond adding twists of lime to Smash, though. You name it, Shirl can make it and will do so with a smile.

SIGHTSEERS

Prepared by Jag (Danger Gal Nomad Intel Specialist)

Founded by Racer Rajavi (SEE PAGE 102) and named by her first recruit, Endo (SEE PAGE 100), the Sightseers are an Aldecaldo (SEE CP:R PAGE 314) Nomad Pack specializing in the transport of small goods, as well as the escort of individuals and caravans alike. Of late, their job has been complicated by two members of their Pack being takenb in custody by the NCPD.

Base of Operations

Not wanting to drain the Aldecaldo camp's limited resources, the Sightseers are a self-sufficient crew. They make their home in the East Cargo Village, a strip of cargo containers on the outskirts of Santo Domingo. Running supplies and escorting caravans pays little, but enough for a few bare-bones containers with the basic necessities. Besides, Racer spends most of her time sleeping in her vehicle anyway.

Recent History

Throughout the Time of the Red, the NCPD and the Aldecaldos had an unspoken agreement. The Nomads may be free spirits at heart, but they know how to police their own and keep the various Packs from causing too much trouble. To the NCPD, Nomads are a necessary nuisance. They ignore most of the mischief the Nomads cause throughout Night City, and the Nomads continue to keep supply lines functioning for all cargo – legal and otherwise. The trouble comes when certain cough newbies cough can't keep their hands, or other cyber appendages, to themselves...

During a recent job, the youngest member of the Sightseers, Swirl (SEE PAGE 104), got careless and pocketed a few things. Our intel says those less-than-legal items were meant for NCPD Precinct #1's Sarge (SEE PAGE 86), who in retaliation trumped up charges leading to a warrant for Swirl and Endo's arrest. Worse, the arresting officer, Pitbull (SEE PAGE 89), went off-leash and beat Endo severely, doing so much damage it exposed and cracked open the Subdermal Armor beneath his skin.

The arrest led to increased tensions between the Nomads of Santo Domingo and the NCPD, especially after photos of Endo's ripped-up body made the rounds on the Data Pool thanks to Trace Santiago. If the two sides can't defuse the situation, it's only a matter of time before their tensions erupt and lead to all-out war between the Lawmen and the Aldecaldos. If he's smart, Sarge will throw Pitbull under the bus and consider himself lucky to have such a perfect scapegoat. Given Sarge is in our pocket, we may need to force him to be smart.

Resources

The Sightseers own a few bikes and a Kombi, all with upgrades essential for moving small cargo and smuggling goods across Night City. They cram into Racer's rig for large jobs, and it functions as an alternative living space when they're on the road for extended periods. Each member of the Pack owns their particular weapons, Cyberware, and accessories. If they run into serious trouble, the Sightseers are Nomads in good standing, and the rest of the Aldecaldos have their backs.

Goals

What does any Pack of Nomads want, other than to survive to see tomorrow without the boot of Corporate overlords stepping on their necks? Some might aspire to adding a second cargo container to their living situation, but for the most part the Sightseers seem content with bouncing from job to job.

Racer and Endo each pick jobs benefiting their individual goals, assisting others in their own way. Racer works toward reinforcing the Nomad Nations by providing resources and protecting supply lines. Endo sees more value in arming local communities against what he views as oppression by Lawmen and Corps. Both share a goal of safety for the downtrodden, although neither likes to admit any purpose beyond personal survival.

ENDO

The Heart of the Pack

Endo has a kind heart – albeit one plated with subdermal armor – and a habit of landing in sticky situations. A crack shot with a handgun with the Cyberware to back it up, he got his start as a mobile enforcer for a small guardian gang intent on protecting the locals of Santo Domingo from unwanted outside influence. Endo's belief in the ability of local communities to supply and police themselves has led to conflict with the NCPD and Corporate Security on multiple occasions.

After Racer Rajavi (SEE PAGE 102) took a job to smuggle much-needed medical supplies to the over-packed suburbs of Santo Domingo, Endo expressed interest in assisting her and became the catalyst for the Sightseers. While Racer focuses on food and meds, Endo's beliefs push him to move scavenged cyberware and weaponry from the city center to poorer communities on the outskirts via the Fixer known as Woodchipper.

A few months ago, Endo spotted Swirl (SEE PAGE 104) attempting to evade NCPD in the University District and helped her disappear. Taking Swirl under his wing and introducing her to the Pack, Endo took her on a few runs across the city. Recently, during one such drop-off, the two were arrested and Endo is currently in NCPD custody, looking like he went five rounds with Adam Smasher.

GAZE

The Fist of the Pack

Endo's got a habit of giving Pack members handles based on their eyes, so the instant he saw the cybereye and targeting scope, Gaze's fate was sealed. Initially hired to intimidate enemies and de-escalate situations by any means necessary, Gaze and his rifle have become an integral part of the Sightseers' security.

More can be said of Gaze's size and stature than his intelligence, but only because he rarely communicates in more than grunts and basic affirmations. Don't let that fool you, though. His assault rifle rarely leaves his hands and in a firefight he's a force to be reckoned with.

Gaze has a sweet spot for Racer (SEE PAGE 102), who knows he operates best when she points at a target and sets him loose. Endo (SEE PAGE 100) and the rest of the Pack, however, he seems to barely tolerate despite his loyalty to the Sightseers. At least on the surface.

Gaze typically rides with the important cargo on large transport jobs, escorts high-value targets, and accompanies Pack members on supply runs involving less reputable clients.

He possesses a healthy respect for Lawmen and the NCPD, but with their recent capture of Endo and Swirl (SEE PAGE 104), he may be rethinking that position.

RACER

The Leader of the Pack

Racer Rajavi would tell you her job is moving goods to make ends meet and that all she wants out of life is to live long enough to see another sunrise from the driver's seat. Her track record says otherwise. Racer works hard to improve the lives of those around her, and her rapidly growing Nomad Pack serves as proof of her true motivations.

After spending a few years as an Edgerunner, running on high-value escort and extraction gigs, last year Racer set her sights on building a family from scratch. But don't be fooled into thinking she's settled down.

While most of her Pack spends their downtime lounging in their containers in the East Cargo Village, Racer prefers the comfort of her Kombi's living quarters. As far as she's concerned, those wheels are all the home she needs. These days she's mostly in the business of moving essential goods between various Nomad Packs and local Reclaimers, delegating easier runs to junior members of the Sightseers.

Food, medicine, and medical tech make up the bulk of Racer's cargo, but some members of her Pack take it upon themselves to transport more delicate and unsavory items. Racer ignores those runs, so long as the Corps and Lawmen don't come knocking.

GLARE

The Eyes of the Pack

The handle "Glare" rings true for this Solo, as it's a coin toss whether you're more likely to catch a glare from his mean mug or from the light reflecting off his cybereyes. After being captured and blinded by the Red Chrome Legion early in his Solo career, Glare replaced his eyes with medical-grade Cyberware.

Less than a day later, he was on a roof overlooking their hideout and picking off gangers with his trusty pneumatic bolt gun.

Over the following years, Glare made a name for himself as a streetmerc and guard-for-hire, taking a special interest in occasional pro-bono work eliminating scavs and boosters.

Racer (SEE PAGE 102) hired Glare to protect two separate convoys on their way to the Aldecaldo camp on the outskirts and, after seeing him take out a group of scavs with a handful of armor-piercing arrows, she welcomed him into the Sightseers as a full member.

Glare's job is to scout drop-off locations and transport routes, provide tactical overwatch, relay information during runs, and take out any would-be marauders with an assortment of bolt gun ammunition.

SWIRL

The Newbie of the Pack

Swirl is the youngest member and most recent addition to the Sightseers, eager to prove her worth. She's spent most of her youth hopping from one Nomad Pack to another, never quite fitting in with any of them. This may have to do with her proclivity for pocketing every shiny object she sets her eyes on.

In the past, Swirl has seemed loyal only to herself, and her departure from a Pack is usually announced by the disappearance of the group's valuables. She is adept at both acquiring and moving items others might overlook.

About six months ago, Swirl stole from a Fixer with powerful connections, and soon after fled from NCPD, zipping through the streets of the University District on her roadbike. When Endo (SEE PAGE 100) pulled up on his own bike and urged her down an alleyway, a desperate Swirl followed and the two evaded their pursuers.

Upon seeing the mesmerizing pattern of her shift tacts, Endo nicknamed her "Swirl" and introduced her to Racer (SEE PAGE 102). Swirl joined the Sightseers on a provisional basis, with Endo filling the role of mentor. After showing her the ropes, Endo started taking her on supply runs. But unable to keep her hands off a few choice items, Swirl was targeted by Sarge and both she and Endo landed in NCPD custody.

TEAM MONSTER

Prepared by Yasmine Saab (Star of Stage, Screen & Intel Reports)

High risk yields high rewards, and Team Monster doesn't flinch at danger – sometimes to their detriment. You know how most people have that voice in their head when they're in trouble? The one screaming "Hey genius, get outta here before you get flatlined"? These chooms must have lost theirs in an upgrade. A motley crew ranging from stoic to thrill-seeking to unhinged, this enterprising team of Edgerunners always seems to get the job done with their limbs and chrome mostly intact.

However, they are Team "Monster" for a reason. Mercs are gonna merc, and if you happen to be in their way, they won't play nice. Hand selected for their individual strengths by a mysterious Fixer named Turbo, Team Monster has been a working partnership for about a year now. Though they didn't necessarily start off as "friends," they know now that they have one another's backs when the going gets rough and the rough gets stabby. Amid the chaos – and I mean chaos with this group – Team Monster is a fiercely loyal crew that can rely on one another in the stickiest of situations. Gossip still circulates around Night City about their infamous heist of the Anne Boleyn, a supermax container ship carrying a major payday's worth of Arasaka milspec gear. They destroyed a fleet of security drones and an absolutely insane AI in the process. Yup, that was them.

We don't have much intel concerning the mysterious Turbo (sometimes known as Mr. Fixit), but what we know is that he is a well-connected individual who honors his agreements, communicates only by Agent, and isn't afraid to provide additional resources to get a job done. He seems to have a long history with Too-Tall (SEE PAGE 111), but seeing as how this group was hand-selected, I wouldn't be surprised if Turbo were in the shadows at some point or another in all their lives, whether they were aware of him being there or not.

Base of Operations

When Team Monster isn't out on assignment, they're known to hang out at the Forlorn Hope. You ever been there? It's a local Edgerunner bar with a long history in Little China. I wouldn't go alone, and I would definitely not go unarmed. Patrons tend to be regulars and likely tight-lipped if they're not well in their cups.

DATA

Want to know more about the Forlorn Hope? See CP:R PAGE 313.

Recent History

More recently we've learned Team Monster helped recover a slew of stolen animal test subjects for Biotechnica. What originated as genetic experiments to enhance and repopulate an ecosystem resulted in a heist to supply rare pets to the highest bidder on the black market. Team Monster followed a hot lead to an upscale residential high rise and what they thought would be an easy-peasy bunny rescue, but the mission turned sideways faster than even a Sandy-enhanced Solo could react to.

Turns out the one little furball multiplied into hundreds of flesh eating – you read that right – killer bunnies. One of them reportedly bit right through Cereal's armor. They somehow managed to return one lone blood-thirsty critter to Biotechnica. Part of me wishes I could have seen one of those obnoxious high society women buy one as a pet. Does that make me a bad person?

DATA

Want to see Team Monster in action? Check out their adventures as Maximum Mike Pondsmith puts them through their paces in Actual Plays on the Realmsmith YouTube channel.

Resources

Given the individual skills of the crew, their access to additional gear thanks to their Fixer Turbo, and the money they have made on missions, Team Monster represents the modern, high-end Edgerunner crew perfectly – lots of fun toys in the hands of a chaotic group of potentially unstable individuals. Totally safe, I'm sure.

Goals

As far as we can tell, they're not big on long-term planning. Team Monster lives for the next big job and a crazy story to tell.

CEREAL

Hack Night City!

Sometimes terror doesn't come from knowing what an opponent will do to you – sometimes it comes from not knowing what they'll do next. And if your enemy's an unpredictable Netrunner with a love of blades and zipping around on skate feet? That's enough to throw a wrench in most enemy plans. Cereal is "all out of bubble gum," and for someone who repeatedly says he doesn't want to resort to violence, it sure seems like he wakes up choosing it.

Cereal seems to follow the well-established mold of "wack Netrunner." He began with minor pranks when younger, slowly escalating to full-on hacking in protest of societal establishments, and soon thereafter data-hacking Corporations. That's what put a target on his back.

Eventually Cereal took to finding work from Fixers to make ends meet and make contacts to help him out should the Corps come calling. Like many Netrunners, he abides by his own code of ethics and remains loyal to those he is close to, particularly Nox (SEE PAGE 109). Despite how often trouble comes looking for him, Team Monster seems to love the guy. They can always count on him to lighten the mood and keep morale high when needed most. Out of the whole crew, Cereal's the most likely to question Mr. Fixit's plans, but what do you expect from someone always railing against authority?

ISOLATE

No Longer a Red Shirt

Isolate grew up in Georgia, son to a legendary freedom fighter named Vladislav, aka the "Mountain Strigoi." SovOil drove his family and community off their mineral-rich land and into the arms of a burgeoning insurgent movement.

Growing up in a state of constant warfare, Isolate honed his weapon and combat skills to a razor's edge. He has a natural talent for long-distance firearms and established a deadly reputation as an elite sniper.

After his father and insurgent cell fell, Isolate decamped to Night City, where he found his years of fighting SovOil made him well-suited for Edgerunning as a Solo.

In a twist of fate (was it fate though?), Isolate found himself under the wing of his "uncle," Mr. Fixit. Still relatively green as an Edgerunner, Isolate is proving his worth and outgrowing the nickname given to him by Paladin (SEE PAGE 110): Red Shirt. The verdict is still out as to if Isolate can make it as a full-time Solo. This guy once side-quested during the middle of an active op to drop off a woman in labor at a hospital.

Granted, he came across her when Team Monster hijacked the ambulance she was riding in, but Isolate prioritized her safety over finishing the job.

LUCKY

High-Flying Healer

Luciano "Lucky" Galanti got his start working with a well-known salvage crew, flying their vehicles, or anything they needed really, no matter what the gig. As his nickname indicates, he's always had a knack for doing whatever it takes to get the job done and somehow getting out of the worst situations alive and kicking.

After the salvage crew fell apart, he picked up work as a pilot for Trauma Team and leveled up his medical skills in the process. Disliking the nine-to-five life, Lucky took his new medical training and piloting skills to Night City Fixers as an Edgerunner.

He worked individual gigs for a while, earning a reputation as the guy who not only got crews in and out but kept them alive no matter how much fire they took.

After a single job with Team Monster, he signed up full-time because why would you leave a great paying gig? And Team Monster welcomed him because it never hurts to have a little luck on your side.

Case in point. On the infamous Anne Boleyn mission, anti-air fire nearly knocked the team out of the sky, but Lucky's good fortune and skills let them land and they pulled off the heist.

NOX

ET Power-Belting Synth Pop Star

Nox Arya is a young Rockerboy who's gained quite a name for herself in recent years, playing in several well-known Night City clubs. With her self-described music style as "extraterrestrial power-belting synth pop," Nox's shows are nothing short of a hallucinogenic experience. Her fans adore the fanfare, the spectacle, and her ethereal presence, but the joy they feel from being part of the revelry is what keeps them coming back. It's subversive yet somehow positive. Quite a dangerous combination if you ask me.

For all the flashy spectacle, off-stage Nox is more down-to-earth with humble beginnings, having worked in dingy clubs for meager wages earlier in her career. It's rumored one club owner in particular started sending her out on some "overtime work," gathering intel in exchange for chrome from a Ripperdoc who "owed him favors." If I had to bet, I'd say her ability to gather information landed Nox on Mr. Fixit's radar.

These days Nox is still a rising star, playing larger and larger venues, but her family is definitely Team Monster. With her clever instincts, wit, and charm, she is highly capable of gaining an audience with most anyone. Take extra caution if Cereal (SEE PAGE 106) is nearby though he gets, uh... protective. I think they're dating? It depends on who you ask.

PALADIN

Beast of a Battler

They always say it's the quiet ones you should be wary of. Paladin is a man of few words, and should he speak them, they'll either make you laugh, or they will be the last words you ever hear. Growing up on The Street in Night City, he always knew he had what it took to climb up out of the Combat Zone and into a better life. Paladin signed up with Militech, doing a few tours protecting weapons runs, high value assets, and dropping down into many high-risk situations.

He soon gained a reputation for being business-minded and following a mission plan to the letter. No problem too big, no emotions in the way. At some point he realized that as a Solo, going full freelance would provide more opportunities and a bigger payday. And as a man with a lot of life experience, he now "enjoys watching the youngsters mess up," as he has been known to put it.

You can recognize him from a mile away thanks to his signature beard (Maryanne Freeman at the Forlorn Hope describes it as a "majestic waterfall") but chances are he won't do more than grunt at you if you greet him.

Paladin runs point for Team Monster on combat ops and if you're ever interrogated by the rest of the crew and they threaten to "get the stick?" That's him.

TOO TALL

Big Man, Big Boom

As you can probably guess by the handle, Too Tall isn't hard to pick out in a crowd. You just have to look up. Standing at nearly 7 feet (2.08 meters), his powerful frame allows for easy use of heavy weapons, which he wields with expertise.

Too Tall has been called a "DaVinci" when it comes to sea-going vessels due to his damn near encyclopedic knowledge of them.

Thorough and efficient, Too Tall's found a niche in the Aldecaldos (SEE CP:R PAGE 314) as a naval expert in a Nation full of land Nomads. He's well respected, too. The reputation he's gained for reliability has made him highly sought after when someone needs assets moved quietly and discreetly across any body of water.

Content to ride with Team Monster, at least for the moment, Too Tall ensures the crew can get the hell out of dodge (relatively) unscathed no matter the situation.

Technically, his family owns the team's AV but Two Tall's content to let Lucky (SEE PAGE 108) fly while he provides cover with his favorite rocket launcher. Too Tall's ability to stay calm, think on his feet, and roll with the punches has raised the bar in terms of what jobs Team Monster takes on.

Team Monster's Zetatech Herakles

After the Anne Boleyn job, Team Monster felt a hole burning in their pocket from all the eb they picked up. Their answer? A new ride. After a particularly raucous night at the Forlorn Hope, they got the blessing Two Tall's (SEE PAGE 111) family to trade in the old AV-4 for a brand new Zetatech Herakles (SEE BLACK CHROME PAGE 63).

Of course, it isn't easy for a crew of Edgerunners to get their grubby mitts on a Herakles. Like most Corps in the Time of the Red, Zetatech's production runs are limited due to supply issues and they prefer to sell to other Megacorps, militarized groups, and security forces.

To obtain their new bird, Team Monster snagged a ride with a Nomad caravan to San José, made contact with a Zetatech AV factory security team member there, and paid an obscene amount of money for a certain door to be unlocked at a certain time on a certain day. You know, the standard way you obtain a military-grade flying car.

Things went pear-shaped halfway through the heist. It ended with Team Monster in possession of their new Herakles and two Zetatech security AVs down and dusted in the badlands outside the city. Needless to say, Team Monster isn't on Zetatech's good side these days.

TRAUMA TEAM SQUAD NC4-2

Prepared by Bex Haigh (Real-Life Superspy Turned DG Analyst)

Cheers for this absolute soap opera of a Trauma Team Squad, boss. If there's a Christmas wedding one year, bring popcorn. Think "three days till retirement" for likely levels of drama.

Honestly, the vids I've seen of this crew are entertainment well worth leaving the UK for. Right up there with the best dramas Auntie Beeb has on offer.

Base Of Operations

Their AV-4 is parked up on the fourth floor of Trauma Team Tower (US fourth, not UK fourth), Bay 4-2, and they run their business out of the adjacent offices.

They're flush but live atop one another. Cazadora (SEE PAGE 114), the boss, sleeps behind dividers in the main office while the pilot, Rockabye (SEE PAGE 118), camps in the AV Bay. There's a literal bunk room next door for Twist (SEE PAGE 117) and Stick (SEE PAGE 116), while Penitent (SEE PAGE 115) and Paddles (SEE PAGE 119) share a conapt a skip and a hop away.

They work, eat, and train together. "Cosy." Luckily, the office suite has a kitchenette and shower room.

Recent History

Squad NC4-2 is a crew of co-dependent over-achievers. A little bird fed me deets on their medical histories, and my take is they're using Trauma Team to shelter from the outside world, taking the toughest shouts (gigs for you lot), for the biggest paydays as a strange way to let adrenaline kill the pain.

They're terrifyingly efficient, specialise in Executive Level calls and poach from other, slower squads. I see disgruntlement but no official complaints in the comms – just whinges about lost commissions.

I've flagged several callouts where they were dispatched for fewer contract holders than they brought back. I know cards do get passed around, but the total numbers are wonky. The anomalous contracts date to the day of the extractions, which is either lucky, or someone's taking advantage of the desperate. Their bosses seem to like the high pressure, on-the-spot sales tactics.

DATA

REO Meatwagon is mentioned in a few bios in this section. For more info on them, see CP:R PAGE 312.

They've had some high-end executive extractions, with glowing reviews on their service record. Recently pulled a pair of "Wellness Thought Leaders" from the surprisingly secure sub-basement of a spa on the New Westbrook/Executive Zone border after it imploded and caught fire.

One type of case they'll trample other teams underfoot for is a building collapse. Understandable – half of them met when someone dumped six floors of architecture on their heads. Hell of a bonding experience.

Resources

Trauma Team isn't the force it was pre-war, but it still has channels for the good gear. This bunch keep their pharmaceuticals processing in-house as much as possible. Bay 4-2 also has biometric security (squad only), a compact but well-equipped armoury, and tools.

DATA

If you need more information on Trauma Team Tower, see CP:R PAGE 313.

Their AV-4 is decently stocked with meds, cryo units, and has been heavily modded with Nomad gear (courtesy of Rockabye's family) and enhanced weaponry and armour. Rockabye handles the maintenance, but Paddles and Penitent make the parts pickups. Operationally, Trauma Team backup is a short call away on a good day; on bad days, "all our operators are busy," so they're on their own.

Goals

Don't die. The dedication to making it home in one piece goes beyond duty into "obsessive and driven." Their inner demons work in concert, keeping them at it despite the danger of crossing over to the great beyond. Anyone goes down, the tea leaves tell me it'll kick off a blood-crazed vengeance quest.

CAZADORA

Squad Leader

Cazadora's a Spaniard by birth, out of the mountains of Guadalajara, and staying in Night City doesn't seem to have been in her plan. She's from a long line of bounty hunters, of the "bring them back alive, dead, or as a representative body bit" school (I've seen the case files, but it's fine, I didn't need to sleep), and they taught little Caz anatomy alongside her combat skills so as provide their clients' "receipts." Eighteen months back, the family let her fly free and do a solo (heh) mission looking for some unlucky sod in Night City; she stalks the guy, sets up shop in an apartment building, makes "friends" with the neighbours. Then someone set demolition charges off and everybody's life changed.

From the reports, Cazadora, Paddles (SEE PAGE 119), Stick (SEE PAGE 116), and a couple of other residents survived the initial crash, which breached the foundations. Several hours later, Cazadora led the remaining survivors out from a sewer grate. Her subsequent therapy sessions identified a massive sense of responsibility born from survivor's guilt, so Stick's suggestion they join Trauma Team together was a perfect fit. She's a natural leader and fast-tracked through Trauma Team training to head this squad. She's scary-quick and dedicated to her team, maybe to a fault.

PENITENT

Squad Gunner

This bloke loves all that goes bang, so I'm not at all shocked he's living with Paddles. They're the perfect storm of violence, both up close and at a distance. Barely toxic at all. Penitent's fairly new to the squad and Cazadora (SEE PAGE 114) insisted on a full personal interview before she even let him put his application in.

He worked in the past as muscle-for-hire but seemed to be bad luck for his crews. Deals he made went south, meetings blew up (literally, on occasion), and people ended up dead. Immediately before joining Trauma Team, he worked a turf war between a pair of minor boostergangs in North Heywood (not important who, both sides are toast). He pitched up with hangers-on to tackle a lone pair of the opposition, only it turns out they weren't gangers, they were a couple of cosplaying Execs walking on the wild side.

Squad NC4-2 got the call and came in guns blazing. Penitent legged it but his mates weren't so lucky. Impressed by the Trauma Team crew and needing new work, Penitent tracked down Paddles, fanboyed his way into a meeting with Cazadora, and let his puppy-enthusiasm carry the day. Helps that he's a lot better with the AV's mounted weapons than Paddles (SEE PAGE 119). Why all this work? Psych profile suggests, deep down, he knows he's useless alone, and NC4-2's a dog with big teeth to cling to.

STICK

Squad Meat Specialist

Stick and her brother Twist (SEE PAGE 117) were born in Night City, but their parents hail from Morocco. They're Corp kids, with an uncle in middle management of Trauma Team, so "Medic" was their destination, Corporate-sponsored training and all.

The wheels came off when Stick made a friend in training, Paddles (SEE PAGE 119), and the two suddenly decamped to work for REO Meatwagon (SEE CP:R PAGE 312). I gather the parents weren't impressed.

So, Stick was working slash-and-grab gigs for less money than she was worth, sharing a place with Paddles (non-romantically as far as I can tell), and then the building fell on them. Calls from her Agent went to REO for medevac, but apparently employee benefits don't cover disaster recovery.

Post-escape, her paycheques were stopped for absenteeism – she kicked off verbally at her shift boss Marek Lewis to no avail, then quit. NCPD found him in the Bay two days later.

Her family connections got her back into the Trauma Team fold, and she clearly feels she owes Cazadora (SEE PAGE 114), since she talked the uncle into bringing her on board, along with Paddles (who quit REO in solidarity). These days, she's good with meat injuries, lives for and at work, and trusts nobody but family, bio and found.

TWIST

Squad Metal Specialist

No surprise Twist grew up with his sister (SEE PAGE 116) and learned the basics of the family business; but after only a few months playing medic, Twist got bitten by the fame bug and made a play for stardom as an independent Pop Media reporter. Going by the name Flashes then, he was smart enough to find the stories but not slick enough to present them well, so never quite broke famous properly.

His biggest story was about the apartment collapse that nearly offed his sister. Flashes pulled an ID on the Nomad pilot, Rockabye (SEE PAGE 118), who delivered the explosives used to flatten the building. He splashed her face far and as wide as he could and even ran an interview with her, naming the client who gave the demolition order on this allegedly empty building.

It took two assassination attempts to send Flashes running for cover back to his family. With techhair and facial bioscuIpt "Twist" looks a little different, and it was easy enough to legacy his way into his sister's squad in Trauma Team, especially since he bought a cracking pilot with him in Rockabye, as an apology for ruining her life.

He's got an aptitude for cybernetic repairs and finds meat bodies "icky." He's a touch twitchy, too, as his time as Flashes left a neon target flashing on his back.

ROCKABYE

Squad Pilot

There's no dark secret here, just straight-up guilt. Rockabye delivered the explosives used to nearly flatten Cazadora and company, though all seems forgiven. She clearly still feels bad for her role in the attack and talking to Flashes (now Twist) (SEE PAGE 117) to expose the guilty party was a dramatic act of contrition at the cost of her own safety. Heavy sacrifice, indeed.

Maybe due to the guilt, Rockabye scarcely leaves Bay 4-2 except on calls and deals with her family (the Gavilan Nomad Pack) via her Agent.

She's still close to Twist, literally and figuratively, and is a spectacular and single-minded pilot. She gets her name from the silky-smooth ride casualties get out of danger zones, which makes for great post-incident reviews, but she bombs into trouble spots like a total demon. Probably why she does most of the squad's vehicle maintenance since the AV-4 has to be in top condition to reach casualties faster than their competition.

I've had eyes on messages trying to tempt her to another crew, but she is working off a debt of pure guilt. Still, I wonder how long before life in her self-imposed cage makes her pine for the open skies of her Nomad past?

PADDLES

Squad Crash Cart Specialist

Paddles gets his name from his novel way of using his defibrillator in combat, a habit he picked up in Combat Zone training missions. He's the one who convinced Stick (SEE PAGE 116) to defect to REO Meatwagon from Trauma Team and around that time, a nice little payment popped up in his account. Looks like he got a signing bonus for the two of them. A quick check doesn't show a similar bonus in Stick's account. My guess is she doesn't know she earned him some extra Euro.

Of all the team, Paddles is the one to watch out for in a fight, because he takes great pleasure in stunning any organic obstacle and will put the boot in to be sure once they're down. Remember Marek Lewis, the REO shift boss who "drowned?" Ruptured spleen and boot marks on his torso. No wonder Paddles jumped ship with Stick to Trauma Team after the building collapse.

Paddles is legit Polish (Krakow), came over as a kid, and is a good-looking lump with a surprisingly silver tongue. He's a passable medic but it's his knack for generating extra revenue that makes him useful. Those anomalous extra contracts I mentioned earlier? Payment tracks show he's been signing casualties up during rescues, which is fast work, and creaming off a premium in the process. Everyone likes him but his loyalty is to violence in my opinion. Could be a weak point in the team.

TRAUMA TEAM SQUAD NC4-2'S SOVOIL MI-60

Even though NC4-2 popped into existence thanks to the assistance of Stick and Twist's uncle, a high-ranking Trauma Team Exec, the squad started off at the bottom of the ladder regarding equipment. Instead of a shiny new Zetatech AV, NC4-2 found themselves stuck with a surplus SovOil Mi-60 left rotting in the basement since before the 4th Corporate War. The other squads giggled, certain NC4-2 wouldn't make it through their first call in the rusted old skyskimmer, much less through their first week on the job.

What they hadn't counted on was Rockabye (SEE PAGE 118). She called in every favour she had with her family and, a week later, the old Mi-60 shone like new, packed full of Nomad upgrades, and ready to out-perform any AV in Trauma Team Night City's fleet.

TYGER CLAWS

Prepared by Michiko Sanderson (Based on Reports by Hu Su-nyang)

The Tyger's Claw served as a proxy gang for Arasaka in Night City before the Time of the Red, but the nuclear explosion in the heart of the Corporate District changed everything. When Arasaka retreated, they left the tattered remains of the Tyger's Claw behind.

In the aftermath of the explosion, Shinobu Nakagawa, renowned actor and owner of the Nakagawa Kabuki Troupe, stepped up as a deal maker. He convinced the local heads of several Japan-based Corps (most notably Segotari, Kendachi, and Kiroshi) to organize the Night City Co-prosperity Sphere (NCCS), and arranged for an exodus of residents from the ruins of Japantown to what would become the Kabuki district of the Watson Development. The NCCS, with Shinobu Nakagawa as the chair, contacted the remnants of the Tyger's Claw and reformed them into the modern guardian gang known as the Tyger Claws.

Nowadays, when people hear about the Tyger Claws, they often think of protectors wearing colorful Oni masks. This group, known as the Kimen-Gumi, have security contracts, deputizing them as law enforcement in specific territories. Despite their frightening appearance, the Kimen-Gumi are disciplined and loyal to their duties and provide good publicity for the gang as a whole.

The Kimen-Gumi serve only as the gang's public face. Beneath the surface, the Tyger Claws take a cut of every activity in their territory, from Night Market sales to pachinko parlor receipts. While they leave the operations of their sponsors, the NCCS, alone, they're happy to insist on "protection fees" from everyone else.

Base of Operations

It isn't surprising to find public Kimen-Gumi offices in both Old Japantown and Kabuki. After all, they operate as a legal entity and even cooperate with the NCPD on some law enforcement matters. What is more surprising to those more familiar with Western gangs than ones inspired by Japanese culture is discovering the Tyger Claws as a whole also keep public offices in both locations. The current leadership of the Tyger Claws operates out of an office in the Nakagawa Kabuki Theater.

DATA

Kabuki is a subdistrict of the Watson Development. For more info on Watson, SEE CP:R PAGE 298.

Recent History

Shinobu Nakagawa died of suspicious causes in 2042, igniting a fierce inheritance battle. After a great deal of bloodshed, the boss of the Tyger Claws, Hayato Nakagawa (aka Shinobu the Second) (SEE PAGE 122), won and inherited Shinobu's asset management company, the Nakagawa Foundation. His wife, Ryoko Fujiwara, now serves as chair of the Foundation.

DATA

On the off chance you don't know about Arasaka, check out CP:R PAGE 267.

Resources

In theory, with the Nakagawa Foundation's wealth and the NCCS's backing, the Tyger Claws should have economic and political power comparable to a modern NeoCorp. However, Ryoko Fujiwara takes her role as guardian of the Foundation seriously and doles out money carefully. In addition, with Night City beginning to stabilize, the individual Corporate members of the NCCS have drawn away from the Tyger Claws in favor of their own security forces and operatives. This forces the gang to rely primarily on their income via the security contracts acquired by the Kimen-Gumi and what they gain from their more illicit activities and legitimate business fronts. If all else fails, rumors suggest they possess a stockpile of Arasaka weapons and gear left over from the war.

DATA

Segotari makes video games and robotics. Kendachi is famous for their weapons and crystal/glass. Kiroshi is the leading name in cyberoptics.

Goals

Publicly, the Tyger Claws remain dedicated to the vision of Shinobu Nakagawa, seeking to protect the Japanese community in Night City. Beneath the surface, the Tyger Claws seek power. Much like Arasaka before them, the Tyger Claws play nice, ingratiating themselves with the community, using their resources to provide aid and protection, all while seizing control of as much as possible.

SHINOBU THE SECOND

Leader of the Tyger Claws

Hayato Nakagawa was adopted by Shinobu Nakagawa after the death of his parents. He wanted to be a Kabuki actor, but did not have the talent to succeed. Disappointed, Hayato joined the Tyger Claws and made a name for himself, advancing through the ranks. He modeled his persona on the "Kabuki-mono," Japanese Rockerboy samurai of the 16th century, from which the word Kabuki originated. With his polished chrome body and flashy costume, he treats The Street as his theater and his regular parades have made him a hero to the youth of the Kabuki subdistrict.

His wife, Ryoko Fujiwara, is his most trusted partner. Originally betrothed in childhood, their engagement was called off by her family when Hayato became a gangster. However, Ryoko continued to love and support Hayato and was instrumental in his winning the inheritance dispute. Afterward, they married despite her family's objections.

Hayato took the name "Shinobu the Second" both to honor his predecessor and to cement his power base. While he respects his wife's wishes to maintain the financial stability of the Nakagawa Foundation, he finds it increasingly difficult to retain respect from the NCCS and the community. He has taken to cybernetic enhancements to dull the pain as he feels the carefully built Tyger Claws empire slipping away.

Where there's light, there's shadow. Shinobu the Second (SEE PAGE 122) and his troupe may strut the streets of Kabuki in flashy outfits, but they don't parade around unprotected. Zen knows the rooftops of the territory well, lurking always nearby and providing covert sniper support to the gang's senior members.

Zen never takes off his helmet in front of others, and his true identity is unknown to the Claws' leaders. He owes a debt to Shinobu Nakagawa and serves the dead man's adopted son to repay the favor. So far, Shinobu the Second respects Zen's desire for privacy. So long as Zen continues to protect him, the leader of the Tyger Claws seems willing to live with the sniper's theatrical eccentricities.

On the other hand, Hu Su-nyang, a former Arasaka operative who helped compile this report, knows Zen's identity. During the 4th Corporate War, Zen acted as one of Kei Arasaka's personal assassins. When Arasaka retreated from Night City, Zen stayed behind, taking the public identity of Zenjyu-bou, a monk at the Oumei-ji temple in the Watson Development. Zen's ultimate motivations are unknown.

We have no intelligence suggesting he is actively working for Arasaka, but we need to maintain surveillance, just in case.

BURAI

Kimen-Gumi Leader

Takeru Akagi, aka Burai, serves as the captain of Kimen-Gumi, the "police" arm of the Tyger Claws. Burai wears a red mask and each of his lieutenants wears a unique mask of a different color, which has led some of the glibber residents of Kabuki to refer to the Kimen-Gumi leadership as the "Kabuki Rangers." Each leader in the Kimen-Gumi controls a squad of Hanmen (Half-masks).

Given his position as captain of the Kimen-Gumi, it should come as no surprise to know Burai is one of Shinobu the Second's (SEE PAGE 122) most trusted companions. Unlike the Tyger Claws leader, Burai is not a showy performer, but a steady and reliable combatant and commander. His parents were high-ranking members in the original Tyger's Claw and some older members, unsatisfied with the lack of a payday after the gang took over the Nakagawa Foundation, pushed for him to take control of the gang. Thus far, Burai has ignored those calls and remained loyal to his boss.

Burai is married, and he and his wife have two children. Because the couple is busy, childcare is often left to his retired parents. Unlike their son, Burai's parents have not abandoned their loyalty to Arasaka and secretly infuse those ideas into their grandchildren. If Burai does not realize his parents' treachery, the Claws will have a big problem in the future. I've noted them down for assassination, just in case.

WAKAKO

Reluctant Confidant

Wakako Okada was born in the Kansai region of Japan and came to Night City University just before the breakout of the 4th Corporate War to study practical clinical medicine. She met her husband Hiroto Miyamoto while at the school.

Following the war, Wakako found work as a laboratory Medtech at Kiroshi. Over time, Wakako immersed herself both in her work and in the extended family of her husband, including his childhood friend, Hayato Nakagawa (SEE PAGE 122). When the family of Hayato's beloved, Ryoko Fujiwara, broke off their betrothal, Wakako and Hiroto served as liaisons, helping the two lovers maintain their connection in the face of familial disapproval and interference.

When the dispute over the Nakagawa Foundation inheritance ignited, enemies of Hayato Nakagawa saw Wakako and Hiroto as his weaknesses and attacked them in their home. They took up arms to fight but only Wakako survived. After Hayato Nakagawa took full control of the Tyger Claws as Shinobu the Second, he promised to provide for Wakako in Hiroto's place, making her a member of the Tyger Claws whether she liked it or not.

Since then, Wakako has become a confidant of Ryoko Fujiwara. Ryoko wants Wakako to quit her job at Kiroshi and come work for the Nakagawa Foundation full-time as her right hand but, thus far, the Medtech has declined the offer.

HAMADA

Boss of the Street Vendors

Kouichi Hamada acts as the boss of the Tekiya (street vendors) in Kabuki for the Tyger Claws. An older member of the gang, he learned the secret sauce recipes and cooking techniques of classic Japanese street foods in the early 2020s.

To pass on his skills to the next generation, he has generously taught a number of apprentices how to cook and manage their own food stalls, creating a thriving Day Market culture in Kabuki.

Although Hamada's technically only a junior ranked member of the gang, high-ranking Fixers of the Claws hold his cooking skills and his ability to train apprentices in high esteem and require anyone opening a stall in their territory to obtain his seal of approval. Hamada never compromises or cheats and he is always sure to emphasize the loyalty and financial obligation anyone who passes his tests must show to the Tyger Claws.

In temperament, Hamada is akin to the caring, old-fashioned Yakuza of film and legend. He is a devout Buddhist and makes regular pilgrimages to the Oumei-ji Temple in the Watson Development. He is also a bit of a gossip, collecting information from his apprentices as he visits them during his daily rounds.

MASA

Kimen-Gumi Beat Cop

Masashi Miyamoto, aka Masa, more or less grew up in the Pachi-Pachi Kaikan pachinko parlor, run by his family, in Kabuki. An example of the newest generation of the Japanese community in Night City, Masa sees the Tyger Claws as a neighborhood association and a part of everyday life. As a child he attended a Claws-sponsored educational program, he cheered as members of the gang marched in local parades, and admired them as they showed off their wealth and power in the neighborhood.

As soon as he was old enough, Masa joined the Kimen-Gumi as a Hanmen and was assigned to Burai's squad. Thus far he has proved an asset and Burai (SEE PAGE 124) is eying him for promotion.

Born and raised in Kabuki, Masa knows many shopkeepers, street vendors, and members of the Claws, and he remembers the faces, names, and pasts of most residents, making it easy for him to spot suspicious activity by strangers.

When unmasked, Masa is a handsome young man with the looks of a J-pop idol, and his friendliness is so unexpected that even those who would be put off by the intimidating appearance of Kimen-Gumi feel comfortable talking to him.

YASU

Fake Otaku Sales Rep

Yasunori Tamada, aka Yasu, is a salesman for Matsura Food Products, a Nomad-affiliated company that supplies Japanese foodstuffs to vendors in Tyger Claws territory. An intelligent Fixer, Yasu threads the fine line of loyalty he walks between the Tyger Claws and his employer carefully. He knows one wrong move could result in a blade across his throat or water in his lungs.

In addition to working his "day job," Yasu makes extra cash by using his contacts to import various items and sell them at the Night Markets organized by Tyger Claws Fixers and via online auctions on the Garden. He also imports Japanese anime, manga, and video game-related items in an attempt to win over attractive members of Moe-Aesthetic posergangs. However, despite his best efforts, they seem keenly aware that his Otaku credentials are lacking and want nothing more than a business relationship.

Recently, tensions between Tyger Claws and Continental Brands have increased after the NeoCorp opened an Oasis store in Kabuki and began harassing and attacking vendors in the area. Yasu himself has begun receiving threats from the NeoCorp and is looking for a way to get Continental Brands off his back before his luck runs out.

SHINMAI

New Rice

Shinkichi Yoneda is a teenager who moved from Old Japantown to Kabuki thanks to the sponsorship of the Tyger Claws. He showed promise in the Tyger Dojo, a Tyger Claws youth martial arts studio chain, and was recruited based on his skill with a blade.

His seniors call him Shinmai, which means "new rice" in Japanese. He isn't happy with the nickname, but he has been told he'll earn a better one if he survives for a year. He is looking forward to that time.

Shinmai has a strong admiration for legendary swordsmen (especially Kenichi Zaburo and Shinobu the Second [SEE PAGE 122]). In addition to performing his regular duties as a low-level Tyger Claws enforcer, he continues to hone his skills at Tora-no-Ana (Tyger's Pit), an advanced dojo run by the Claws.

Shinmai is seen as a younger sibling by the members of the Tyger Claws, but they aren't looking to form a strong bond of attachment just yet. They know that a man of no genius who takes up the sword is doomed to a quick death. If Shinmai dies, there's always another graduate of the Tyger Dojo they can recruit.

There's always another "new rice" waiting in the wings.

ZONERS

Prepared by Cornelius Wright (Formerly Hellraiser of 6th Street)

This group reminds me of Johnny Silverhand's first footsteps, speaking truth to power but willing to back it up with a big stick. The South Night City Zoners are a movement in the process of forming. Most of this intelligence comes from months of neighborhood video and audio surveillance secretly recorded by the NCPD. I "acquired" it by hiring a trustworthy freelance Netrunner (please find the attached receipt for reimbursement of payments rendered).

The Zoners originated as the brainchild of a small group of dedicated activists before expanding to more than two hundred members. Originally, they tried to protest legally, going through the South Night City City Manager's office to receive permission, but were turned down when it was discovered the group was demonstrating against the diversion of reconstruction resources from South Night City to wealthier districts.

The Zoners protested regardless. After the second demonstration, the NCPD increased their surveillance of the protesters and even began venturing into the Combat Zone in force to throw down with them. Obviously, someone in power sees this group as a threat.

Base of Operations

The dozens of identified members (including those in this report) reside within the same neighborhood in South Night City, roughly in the center of the district's northern portion. Most members live in two large housing complexes, with others coming from nearby cargo container parks and tent cities. The NCPD surveillance we obtained reveals the group meets fortnightly in one of the two complexes' laundry rooms, rotating regularly.

Given the many abandoned warehouses and bombed-out buildings nearby, if the movement evolves into a full organization, they'll likely begin using a more secure and secretive location.

Recent History

A seemingly spontaneous demonstration erupted late last week, catching even the Zoners' leaders by surprise, as they weren't on the scene for the first hour. The cause of the demonstration seems linked to news of Night Corp transferring money from South Night City's repair fund to support upgrades to the NCPD Police Precinct #1 headquarters.

Unlike the previous protests, which stayed isolated in South Night City, a critical mass of Zoners marched into the Glen and ran up against NCPD barricades. The police numbers couldn't match the Zoners and, during the protest, a Molotov cocktail was thrown at either the Zoners, bystanders, or NCPD. The identity of the thrower, and the intended target, remains unknown. The Molotov cocktail kicked off a massive, hours-long street brawl, resulting in expensive and substantial property damage. In the end, a fire erupted in nearby buildings and snapped all involved out of their violent haze. The Zoners fled.

DATA

You'll find more information on South Night City on CP:R PAGE 299.

Resources

As a whole, resources are constrained and individualized. The "gang" is not formalized, so they lack infrastructure. But given the Zoners' day-to-day survival in a Combat Zone, they might have access to a mishmash of Cyberware or weaponry looted from dead combatants. It's a scavenger's paradise, and Corps like to do "live fire testing" on site. I've attached a video from Media Micheaux, showing Nova Arms using an experimental weapon against some boostergangers, to this report

DATA

Nova Arms is a weapons manufacturer. They're most famous for the Nova Model 757 Cityhunter (SEE PAGE 145).

Goals

The Zoners' goal is obvious – they want equitable distribution of resources during Night City's reconstruction and beyond. Given how South Night City became a waystation for the disenfranchised due to corruption, greed, and incompetence, the Zoners need more than demonstrations if they stand a chance at succeeding.

VANISHER

Mysterious Zoner Ally

Vanisher's identity, gender, political affiliations, and funding are all unknown. I had to call in dozens of favors for this report, and it's still mostly speculation. Vanisher is a force of nature and a Solo who's been operating out of Night City for the last five years. Previously, operatives matching their description and methodologies were reported in Ethiopia, Japan, Argentina, and the Great Plains. Oddly, Vanisher seems obsessed with keeping as small a rep as possible, and it's included in every one of their contracts – clients aren't allowed to divulge who they hired to run a mission. Last year, a Fixer deep in their cups revealed Vanisher's involvement in a caper and was found dead in their home days later. The effectiveness of Vanisher's work has employers more than happy to keep things on the downlow.

Since arriving in Night City, Vanisher has worked for all the major Corporations, primarily performing extractions, targeted wetwork, and retrievals. Vanisher is an expert in stealth, inflictions, small arms combat, and martial arts who seems to pride themselves on their professionalism. If hired, they flatline the target regardless of them being a saint or sinner but they never kill civilians and always minimize collateral damage. We suspect a strong code of honor, which may be why they're doing comp work for the Zoners – even if the Zoners don't know it themselves.

TEARJERKER

Fire Captain

Some folks just can't help themselves – they're just born to help others. They don't need praise, pay, or a reason, and Tearjerker is one of them. She is the captain of a volunteer fire department, which she built with her partner Forty-Mike-Mike (SEE PAGE 134) by recruiting South Night City civilians, and even gangers, and forging them into a force to be reckoned with. Tearjerker was a Petrochem MP (Military Police) during the 4th Corporate War, where she got her chrome, extensive combat training, and way with people. The firefighting, she learned on the job, when "accidental misfire" from SovOil combat units set one of Petrochem's Texas oil wells ablaze.

Tearjerker is part of the Zoners leadership. She advocates for a peaceful movement but knows peace isn't always possible. She believes in the mission first and does whatever it takes to succeed in order to protect and save the lives of the citizens in South Night City.

During the last protest, when the NCPD turned heavy weapons on the crowd (protesters and bystanders alike), she didn't hesitate. Tearjerker switched out the ammo in her grenade launcher from teargas to armor piercing and started firing, killing two NCPD fuckers and injuring several others. Her actions forced the cops back and saved who-knows-how-many people.

FORTY MIKE-MIKE

MP Turned Firefighter

Forty Mike-Mike is a founder and second-in-command of the South Night City volunteer fire department. She and her partner, Tearjerker (SEE PAGE 133), built it together by recruiting local residents tired of seeing their shit burned down. As a former MP (Military Police) during the 4th Corporate War, she's taken it upon herself to teach the fire department the basics of firearms, combat, rescue, and even some TAC training. While the department focuses on saving lives and minimizing damage, they all live in an active Combat Zone.

These skills keep the firefighters and those they're rescuing alive and they know, if anyone calls for backup, everyone comes running.

Forty Mike-Mike extensive heavy weapons training is obvious from her record. In a recent incident, she went one-on-one against a cyberpsycho for over a minute as the fire department rescued the residents of a tenement set ablaze with them trapped inside. However, her true talent is in teaching.

Using her military training, life experiences, and motivational style of encouragement, she has proven a powerful force in organizing and educating both the fire department and the Zoners to be more effective.

MISTER STUDD

Braindance Bon Vivant

Mister Studd is the head of what can only be described as an artistic porn troupe, and the star of such Braindance masterpieces as My 12 and Your One, Cyber Me All the Way Down, and Chrome to Choomba. He occupies "The Lair," an entire floor of a large South Night City housing complex, with his gender-fluid harem of followers. I've sent the Braindance (BD) chips purchased for this report to the Danger Gal media archives (and billed the office for them, as it was for work). The Lair is decorated in a 1960s free-love aesthetic with various weapon lockers hidden under rugs, drapes, and sex toys.

Career aside, Mister Studd is also proficient with shotguns and repelling sieges. A few months ago, Zhirafa tried to evict the complex's occupants through questionable methods and sent a boostergang to throw everyone out before the legal order could be contested. Mister Studd dispatched the five gangers alone and sent their remains back to the Corp before recording his day's second performance. Remarkably the killing didn't seem to faze him, his ability to rise to the occasion, or his harem. Following the event, Zhirafa stood down as everything was recorded from Mr. Studd's viewpoint, with the BD chips distributed for free.

As you can imagine, the media outlets had a field day.

FREEFALL

Creating a Movement

FreeFall (Nigel Benson) is a South Night City native, born and raised in the Combat Zone alongside their sibling and Maelstrom member, Drop (SEE PAGE 75). It's funny how different siblings can be, as one went chromed-out-boostergang-killer and the other became a brained up-chromed-activist. One helps. The other terrorizes. Yet, they remain family. At any time, FreeFall and Drop are either at the other's throat or saving each other from peril. It's a coin flip.

FreeFall is a leader of the Zoners movement and crafts much of their promotional text. While a skilled combatant in handguns, they advocate for nonviolent solutions for Zoners' demands. From what we can tell, FreeFall developed their passion for activism and Netrunning skills while serving as a computer operator for Night Corp's soup stations following the 4th Corporate War. Of course, those stations only lasted a few months before Night Corp decided the funds were better spent elsewhere.

The balaclava FreeFall wears during demonstrations has a built-in gas filter, acting as an anti-smog mask. This allows them to throw smoke and other non-deadly grenades as a distraction to allow fellow Zoners to escape without worry about the toxic clouds affecting them.

NEMO

AWOL Soldier Turned Activist

War breaks folks in big and small ways. Some people tough it out until the end, and others run. Count Nemo (Mason Price) among the latter. After less than a month in the 4th Corp War, he deserted his unit in a firefight. Reporting shows the unit as killed in action, and it was believed he was among their number.

Since then, Nemo has stayed off the radar, mostly living in tent cities and moving every few months, as it allows him to perform day labor and earn cash.

But time spent in South Night City changed all that staying-under-the-radar business. Unwilling to move again, Nemo now calls on his soldier skills to pay the bills. Nothing big time. Just small gigs: security for Fixers, escort missions, and "package delivery."

Nemo's calm, detached demeanor is a facade hiding someone looking for a better life. He is running multiple missions monthly but doesn't appear to spend his new funds on improved cyberware or gear. How long he can keep up this pace is anyone's guess.

My analysis suggests he is investing in South Night City properties, and looking for political candidates to back with South Night City's future as their platform.

SPEED DEMON

She's a Demon on Wheels

Looking for allies, the Zoners have found the Jodes, one of the largest Nomad Nations. While the Jodes are reluctant to participate in the protests in force, they have dispatched one of their members, Speed Demon, to the South Night City to represent them in future planning. Speed Demon sped onto the scene in a Diego Motors Chupacabra after the violence erupted during the most recent protest, bursting through the law enforcement blockade as the Zoners sought to retreat. Thanks to her actions, most of the Zoners evaded arrest and escaped. Speed Demon's actions were a blatant show of support by the Jodes and, if the authorities ever figure out she was involved, it could cause problems on the Night City Council.

Speed Demon is an exceptional driver known for getting more "oomph" out of anything with wheels. A substantial amount of her Pack's funds originate from street races won by Speed Demon, enabling them to secure needed supplies when jobs are few and far between. While not a sharpshooter, she's skilled with automatic weapons and has been quoted saying, "Why use one bullet when ten will do?"

When not helping the Zoners, Speed Demon returns home. She can often be found drinking with fellow Nomads and friends in the Jesse James' Kosher Deli (SEE CP:R PAGE 313) or repairing vehicles at her Pack's nearby garage.

Speed Demon's Diego Motors Chupacabra

When it comes to driving, Speed Demon prefers two wheels to four. Her personal vehicle is a Harvey 100 (SEE BLACK CHROME PAGE 69), lovingly modified with not one but two NOS injection systems, ready to give her the boost she needs to win any street race.

Of course, a roadbike isn't engineered to handle transport or blockade running, so when the elders assigned her to liaison with the Zoners, Speed Demon requested something with more cargo space, more durability, and more power. If she was going up against NCPD and not just outrun them, she'd need more than her beloved Harvey 100.

End result, they handed her the keys to one of the family's transports. Made of refurbished trucks, muscle cars, and recycled technology, the Chupacabra (SEE BLACK CHROME PAGE 66) works perfectly as both a badlands buggy and an urban avenger. Speed Demon's model is pretty much stock standard except for one addition – she affixed a combat plow to the front so she could wreck her way through any NCPD blockade.

She also scrubbed off any markings identifying the Chupacabra as belonging to the Jodes. No one wants NCPD to trace her actions back to the Nomads.

ALPHA

Smart Scavver

Most consider living in South Night City to be either a death sentence or hell on Earth, but Alpha sees it as an opportunity for anyone brave enough to do whatever it takes. And Alpha does. Alpha's a skilled gunfighter with a flair for killing and little qualm about yanking out chrome and selling it to their friendly neighborhood Fixer.

South Night City claims hundreds of lives a month due to grisly and deadly combat. The battlefield never entirely falls silent but those lost souls' bodies litter the area. Their guns, armor, equipment, and Cyberware remain untouched even as they rot. Competing with fellow scavengers, not to mention dealing with explosive booby traps left behind by boostergangers looking for a laugh, makes it dangerous but for those willing to take a risk? A scavver's life can be a winning lottery ticket.

Alpha is the sort of scavenger who watches the fights play out, learns how the winners operate, and picks over the dead when the dust settles. After all, a Combat Zone gunsmith doesn't care if a SMG was stolen, and most ripperdocs could give two shits if a chrome arm was ripped from a body (fresh or cold). They'll just pay a little less for it.

Why is Alpha hanging with the Zoners? Probably so they can loot the dead for parts after NCPD rolls in and flatlines a bunch of protesters.

BLAZE

Corp Double Agent

Blaze (Johnny Hammond) is a Canadian-born Militech-employee-turned-arsonist and undercover spy for the Zoners. After graduating from a prestigious Canadian university, he was quickly recruited by Militech into one of their countless research and development divisions. He rapidly ascended through the ranks and acquired a corner office in the Washington DC branch before being transferred to Night City.

Unfortunately, an incident occurred a few years after he began working in Night City. He was almost fired but ultimately suffered a worse fate: demoted and forced to work under his former assistant.

We don't know if this changed Blaze's motivations regarding Corps or if his participation in the Zoner movement is part of some two-bit revenge scheme. Either way, Blaze joined the Zoners. To ensure his sincerity, a fellow Zoner, Charles, lives with him under the guise of Blaze's boyfriend. Thus far Blaze's acting as a Corporate spy and, in this role, has provided the group with a trickle of useful information. Truth be told, he isn't too bright.

For example, he wears fingerless gloves. During a recent Zoners gathering, I "acquired" a used Koff Pop cup of Blaze's, and we identified him via the fingerprints.

WRECKER

Student? Activist? Journalist?

Scarlet Harris, aka Wrecker, is a sophomore at Night City University dual majoring in journalism and political science. Reporting and video surveillance indicate she has snuck out nightly from her dorm in the University District to support the Zoners movement for the last two months. Unfortunately, this information is pulled from the files NCPD generated after arresting her during a protest. The exciting part about our student here is that a fleet (more than a dozen) of elite lawyers swooped down on the precinct within two hours of her arrest, and she was out on the street shortly afterward with an official apology from NCPD.

After each protest, footage aired on the Garden Patch of an up-and-coming Media named Syndrome – who only "appears" on their videos via modulated voiceovers – and who focuses heavily on the Zoners movement. Analysis of the videos indicates all footage captured is from Wrecker's viewpoint, likely recorded via a camera in her cybereye. Based on this and Wrecker's university degree choices, we believe her to also be Syndrome, meaning she isn't just leading a double life but a triple one. Side note? She isn't a harmless student either.

When violence erupted, Wrecker lived up to her name with her crowbar and left several NCPD troops "wrecked."

NEW GEAR

TOYS FOR YOUR CYBERPUNK

When it came to gearing up the characters in Danger Gal Dossier, we set a rule for ourselves: only use equipment from the Cyberpunk RED core rulebook or one of our free DLCs (see the introduction ON PAGE 4 for more information on our free DLCs). You're free to swap a character's gear with something from one of our other books, such as Black Chrome, but we didn't want to require buying anything beyond the Cyberpunk RED core rulebook to make Danger Gal Dossier work.

We broke our own rule a few times by including gear from Micro Chrome and both Interface RED Volumes 1 and 2 (all available on DriveThruRPG). Don't worry, though! To make life easier, we're reprinting the rules for any item from a Danger Gal Dossier stat block not included in the Cyberpunk RED core rulebook. If you want more on the lore for each item, please check out the DLC we pulled them from. Enjoy!

WEAPONS

ARASAKA WAA BULLPUP ASSAULT WEAPON

Cost: 1,000eb (Very Expensive)

The Arasaka WAA Bullpup Assault Weapon is an Exotic Assault Rifle with a 30-shot capacity and a Smartgun Link. Despite being an Exotic weapon, it is still capable of loading Non-Basic Ammunition.

DATA

These weapons first appeared in multiple DLCs, including 12 Days of Gunmas, Woodchipper's Garage, Night City Weather, and Black Chrome+. The MicroCutie comes from Micro Chrome.

CONSTITUTIONAL ARMS MULTIPLE AMMO PISTOL

Cost: 500eb (Expensive)

The Constitutional Arms Multiple Ammunition Pistol is an Exotic Very Heavy Pistol with a 5-shot capacity. Unlike other weapons, you can load this weapon with a mix of up to five different kinds of Very Heavy Pistol Ammunition and select which ammunition you want to fire with each shot.

IMI CHAINKNIFE

Cost: 500eb (Expensive)

The IMI Chainknife is a One-Handed Exotic Medium Melee Weapon with ROF1. As an Action, the Chainknife can be revved. Once revved, it remains so until dropped or stowed, or until it is revved down as an Action. While revved, the Chainknife is an Excellent Quality One-Handed Exotic Very Heavy Melee Weapon.

KENDACHI DRAGON FLAMETHROWER

Cost: 1,000eb (Very Expensive)

A One-Handed Exotic Shotgun with a 2-shot capacity fired with the Heavy Weapons Skill instead of the Shoulder Arms Skill. Mechanically, this flamethrower is a Shotgun that can only fire Incendiary Shotgun Shells (ammunition cost for this weapon is also the same as Incendiary Shotgun Shells), except that while your targets are ignited, until they spend an Action to put themselves out, they take 4 damage directly to their HP at the end of each of their turns. If they were already on fire, this fire effect replaces one that would deal less damage. Multiple instances of this effect do not stack. Damage dealt by this weapon cannot cause a Critical Injury, and it cannot be used to make Aimed Shots.

MAGNUM OPUS HELLBRINGER

Cost: 1,000eb (Very Expensive)

The Magnum Opus Hellbringer is an Exotic Very Heavy Pistol with a 3-shot capacity. It deals 5d6 damage with a single shot, but if fired by a user without BODY 10 or higher, the weapon jams after each shot. Unjamming the Hellbringer requires an Action to reverse the malfunction before it can be used again.

MIDNIGHT ARMS SDF-45

Cost: 1,000eb (Very Expensive)

The SDF-45 is an Exotic Rocket Launcher with a maximum range of 400 m/yds. Its magazine holds 4 Armor Piercing Rockets. Whenever you attack with this weapon, it fires two rockets at once at your target. However, instead of the user making a Heavy Weapons Skill Check to hit the target, the GM decides where both rockets hit. Dodging an explosion made by this weapon is a DV15 Evasion Check that can be attempted only by a defender that could already dodge bullets, and places them outside the blast area if they succeed.

When deciding where the two rockets hit, the GM must choose two locations within 50 m/yds of the intended target, each of which must be at least 10 m/yds apart. This weapon cannot be Upgraded by a Tech in a way that removes this GM targeting feature.

MILITECH CRUSHER

Cost: 500eb (Expensive)

The Militech Crusher is an Exotic Very Heavy Pistol with a 6-shot capacity that fires only Shotgun Shell Ammunition.

MILITECH TACTICAL UMBRELLA

Cost: 1,000eb (Very Expensive)

Militech's Tactical Umbrella protects against Acid and Blood Rain like a regular umbrella but is also two weapons in one: an Excellent Quality Exotic Heavy Melee Weapon and a Poor Quality Exotic Heavy Pistol that can load both Basic and Non-Basic ammunition. The Militech Tactical Umbrella's magazine holds two bullets and must be reloaded like a typical Heavy Pistol.

Molotov Cocktail

Cost: 20eb (Everyday)

An Incendiary Grenade that deals 5d6 damage. While a Character is carrying a Molotov Cocktail, if that unlucky choomba takes any damage that penetrates their armor, all Molotov Cocktails on their person have a 50 percent chance of being destroyed beyond repair. If that happens, it doesn't explode but does set the choomba Deadly on Fire (SEE CP:R PAGE 180) and destroys beyond repair all other Molotov Cocktails they're carrying.

Nomad Air Cannon

Cost: 1,000eb (Very Expensive)

A liquid-launching air cannon. Mechanically, it acts as an Exotic Shotgun with a 1-shot capacity that fires using the Shotgun Shell alternate firing mode, but instead of dealing damage it coats any target the spread hits in the liquid fired. Typically loaded with paint or water. However, if loaded with acid, all armor worn by any coated target is reduced by 1 SP. One shot of acid costs 10eb (Cheap). Theoretically, the weapon can also be loaded with either Poison or Biotoxin. Loading the weapon with either requires 3 vials per shot. Any target coated must make a Resist/Torture Drugs Skill Check as if hit by Poison or Biotoxin Ammunition (SEE CP:R PAGE 346 AND 345).

Nomad Pneumatic Bolt Gun

Cost: 500eb (Expensive)

The Nomad Pneumatic Bolt Gun is an Exotic Sniper Rifle with an 8-shot capacity that deals 4d6 damage with a single shot. Instead of firing bullets, it fires Arrows. It is capable of loading all Non-Basic Ammunition despite being an Exotic weapon.

Nova Model 757 Cityhunter

Cost: 1,000eb (Very Expensive)

The Nova Model 757 Cityhunter is an Exotic Heavy Handgun with an 18-shot capacity and a Smartgun Link. Despite being an Exotic weapon, it can fire Smart Ammunition. Ammunition bought for this gun can be fired only by this gun and is purchased in increments of 18, which cost the same as ammunition purchased in increments of 10 for other weapons.

Pursuit Security Incorporated TearJerker

Cost: 500eb (Expensive)

An Excellent Quality Exotic Grenade Launcher with a 3-shot capacity. It can only fire Smoke or Teargas Ammunition.

Sanroo Hello Cutie MicroCutie

Cost: 1,000eb (Very Expensive)

An Excellent Quality Exotic Medium Pistol with a magazine size of 10. As an Action you can activate or deactivate Hypurrburst™. While in Hypurrburst™, the MicroCutie is ROF1, purrs audibly, and deals 4d6 damage but drains all remaining bullets from the magazine to fire once. The gun automatically disables Hypurrburst™ while there are fewer than 4 bullets in the magazine. Hypurrburst™ cannot be used to make Aimed Shots.

Teen Dreem

Cost: 20eb (Everyday)

The Teen Dreem is a Poor Quality Exotic SMG with a 10-shot capacity. Unlike other weapons, this weapon can use Autofire and Suppressive Fire as long as it has at least 2 bullets in the magazine, both of which drain the mag. Whenever you use Autofire or Suppressive Fire with a Teen Dreem the front of the barrel sloughs off after it finishes firing, destroying the weapon beyond repair.

Cyberware

Combat Jaw

Cost: 500eb (Expensive) • Install: Clinic

Humanity Loss: 14 (4d6)

External Body Cyberware. Requires 2 Option Slots. The user's jaw is replaced with a sizable hydraulic jaw with two rows of reinforced teeth. Very Heavy Melee Weapon.

Kiroshi OptiShield

Cost: 500eb (Expensive) • Install: Clinic

Humanity Loss: 7 (2d6)

External Body Cyberware. Retractable Anti-Dazzle Mirrorshades built into the brow can be extended or retracted with an Action. With the Mirrorshades extended, the user is immune to blindness or other effects caused by dangerous flashes of light, like those of a flashbang.

Lead's Turn-On-Show-Off Nails

Cost: 100eb (Premium) • Install: Mall

Humanity Loss: 0 (N/A)

Fashionware. A full set of 10 programmable lighted fingernails allow the user to bring the nail art of their dreams to life. Each purchase comes with a set of light pens for creating new nail art presets. Presets can also be downloaded from the CitiNet. Counts as an installation of Light Tattoo for reaching the +2 Wardrobe & Style bonus (SEE CP:R PAGE 358). Can be installed on both meat and Cyberware hands.

DATA

The Cyberware in this section originally debuted in the following DLCs: 12 Days of Cybermas and Must Have Cyberware Deals. Some come from Interface RED volume 2.

PerfectFit Cyberfoot

Cost: 100eb (Premium) • Install: Clinic

Humanity Loss: 2 (1d6/2 Round up)

Cyberleg Option. As an Action, a user can change the dimensions of their cyberfoot to any size between Euro size 0 to US size 37AA. A state-of-the-art hydraulic heel provides superior support, and assists the micro-adjustable toe bed in making any shoe in your collection comfortable enough for any activity. When paired, this Cyberware reduces any penalty related to wearing ill-fitting or inappropriate footwear for a non-fashion situation to zero. Can be installed as the only piece of Cyberware in a meat leg.

Psiberstuff Watch-Man

Cost: 100eb (Premium) • Install: Mall

Humanity Loss: 3 (1d6)

Cyberarm Option. A fully functional Agent (SEE CP:R PAGE 352) with a flip-up screen built into the cyberarm.

Raven Microcybernetics MicroWaldo

Cost: 1,000eb (Very Expensive) • Install: Clinic

Humanity Loss: 7 (2d6)

Cyberarm Option. Neuralware Option. A Medtech using a MicroWaldo gains +1 to their Surgery Skill.

Reflex Co-Processor

Cost: 500eb (Expensive) • Install: Hospital

Humanity Loss: 14 (4d6)

Neuralware Option. Assists the Neural Link in its processing duties, freeing it up to focus entirely on enhancing the user's reflexes. A user with a Reflex Co-Processor can dodge bullets regardless of their REF.

Sycust FleshWeave

Cost: 1,000eb (Very Expensive) • Install: Hospital

Humanity Loss: 7 (2d6)

External Body Cyberware. Skin Weave. The user's body and head are armored at SP 7. Your SP in any location is determined by your highest source of SP in that location. Additionally, whenever your armor is ablated in a location, all sources of SP in that location are ablated at the same time.

After 10 minutes without strenuous activity, nanomachines present repairs both the body and head location of the FleshWeave to full SP.

OTHER GEAR

Bicycle

Cost: 100eb (Premium)

A two-wheeled, muscle-powered vehicle. Bicycles follow the same rules as other vehicles in Cyberpunk RED (SEE CP:R PAGE 189) with the following exceptions.

- Bicycles have SDP 15, a single seat, a cost of 100eb (Premium), and their Speed depends on the rider's BODY as noted below.

| BODY | Speed (Combat) | Speed (Narrative) |
|---|---|---|
| BODY <4 | 8 MOVE | 12 MPH /19 KPH |
| BODY 4 to 7 | 10 MOVE | 20 MPH/32 KPH |
| BODY 8+ | 15 MOVE | 30 MPH/48 KPH |

- A rider with BODY 11 or higher is too heavy for a standard bicycle and cannot ride it properly.
- Bicycles can't be acquired or upgraded using a Nomad's Moto Role Ability. Bicycles cannot accept upgrades meant for motorized vehicles.
- Bicycles are ridden using the Athletics Skill instead of Drive Land Vehicle, and they're repaired using Basic Tech instead of Land Vehicle Tech.
- Bicycles cannot be controlled via Interface Plugs. Manual control only.

- When riding a bicycle, you use your Initiative. You don't go to the top of the queue.
- Damage for crashing/ramming is 3d6 for the bicycle and the target struck, instead of 6d6. In addition to suffering the Whiplash Critical Injury, the rider is thrown off the bike and considered Prone (SEE CP:R PAGE 169).
- If a defender dodges a ramming attack from a bicycle, they do not have the option of landing on top of it.
- At the GM's discretion, performing a physical task not related to riding while operating a bicycle, such as shooting a firearm, counts as a Complex Task (SEE CP:R PAGE 130) and imposes a −2 modifier to Checks.
- Riding a bicycle takes physical effort. If the GM deems it appropriate, they can ask for an Endurance Check based on the Riding Fatigue table at the end of a long ride. If the Character fails the Check, consider them fatigued, as if they had slept uncomfortably the night before (SEE CP:R PAGE 130) for the rest of the day.

| Hours Spent Riding | Endurance DV |
|---|---|
| 1 | DV 13 |
| 3 | DV 15 |
| 5 | DV 17 |
| 6+ | DV 21 |

Inline Skates

Cost: 50eb (Costly)

Inline Skates increase movement by 4 m/yds when using the Run Action. Pulling the skates on or taking them off requires an Action.

Any cyberware options stored in a Cyberleg or meat leg are inaccessible while the skates are worn.

At the GM's discretion, performing a physical task involving the legs or balance while wearing skates might count as a Complex Task (SEE CP:R PAGE 130) and impose a −2 modifier to Checks.

Mercurius Cyberchair

Cost: 100eb (Premium)

A sport model motorized mobility device with an impressive number of features for its accessible price point, the Mercurius is Rocklin Augmentic's most affordable Cyberchair. Seating one with Rocklin's comfortable and secure automatic harnessing system, the Mercurius is the consumer model of the regulation wheelchair used by the Night City Nuke, Night City's Murderball team.

To pilot the Mercurius, a user must either plug in one of their Interface Plugs for hands-free control, or dedicate a hand to operating the armrest's control panel. While using a hand to pilot the Mercurius, that hand cannot be used to do anything else. While piloted, any attacks targeted at the Cyberchair are instead targeted at its pilot.

The chair's pilot cannot be removed from the Cyberchair as long as they are conscious.

When controlling the Mercurius, the pilot's MOVE becomes 5 (minus any Armor Penalties), and all movement options (Run, Jump, Climb, Swim, Get Up, and so forth) are available to them. Stairs pose no challenge to the Mercurius's specially engineered wheel system and can be climbed with no penalty. Any Critical Injury the pilot suffers that lowers their MOVE will instead lower the MOVE granted to the pilot by the Cyberchair. Quick Fixes and Treatment to remove the effects of the Critical Injury are applied to the chair and follow the rules for Critical Injuries and Cybertech (SEE CP:R PAGE 223).

The Mercurius Cyberchair cannot be rendered inoperable by EMP effects, like Microwaver pulses, or Non-Black ICE Program Effects.

Junk Ammunition

Cost: 10eb (Cheap) for 50 rounds

Ammo Types Available: Arrows, Bullets, and Slugs

Damage dealt by a weapon loaded with Junk Ammunition is reduced by 1d6 (minimum 1d6) against any target with 1 or more SP when fired in Single Shot, and the Autofire Rating of any weapon firing Junk Ammunition is reduced by 1 to a minimum of Autofire (3). Any weapon capable of firing Basic Ammunition can load Junk Ammunition.

DATA

The new gear here originated in several DLCs, including Spinning Your Wheels, Cyberchairs, and Black Chrome+. The Observer drone comes from Interface RED volume 1. Smart Lenses first appeared in Micro Chrome.

The Observer

Cost: 1,000eb (Very Expensive)

Data: 6 MOVE • 15 HP • Linked to Agent

Counter: DV17 Electronics/Security Tech • 5 minutes

Equipped With: Observation Camera

A flying drone with four rotors roughly the size of a Cyberpunk RED Jumpstart Kit. It does not require a NET Architecture.

When purchased, an Observer is linked to an Agent. Voluntarily linking it to a new Agent requires 5 uninterrupted minutes and both Agents must remain within 6 m/yds of the drone. Countering an Observer requires 5 minutes, and the person countering must stay within 6 m/yds of the drone the entire time. If countered, the hour of footage stored on the drone can be viewed or downloaded and the Observer can be linked to a new Agent with an Action. The Observer has three operation modes: Standby, Auto, and Direct Control. Switching modes does not require an Action.

Standby Mode: In standby mode, an Observer is powered on but not operating. It is not recording data, although it can still be used as a real-time camera. When in standby mode, an Observer cannot move, nor can it make or dodge attacks.

Auto Mode: When not being directly controlled, an Observer orbits within 6m/yds of its linked Agent, recording audio and video. The drone responds to simple verbal commands such as "Record the person I'm pointing at." These verbal commands do not require an Action. The recordings are stored both on an onboard memory chip and the linked Agent. The onboard memory chip holds one hour of content before new footage overwrites old footage automatically. When in auto mode, an Observer cannot make or dodge attacks.

Direct Control Mode: The drone can also be controlled directly via its linked Agent, using an Action in the same manner as a Netrunner using the Interface Ability Control (SEE CP:R PAGE 199). When controlled directly, all attacks and defenses are made using the user's own Skills as if they were firing its weapons in their own hands and dodging with their own body. An Observer cannot dodge ranged attacks, regardless of the user's Reflex.

If an Observer moves beyond the 6 m/yd signal tether to its linked Agent, it stops functioning and lands harmlessly on the ground.

Each unit has 48 hours of operational time before it needs to charge for an hour.

Piranha Smash

Cost per Dose: 10eb (Cheap)

Yellow, foamy, with lime-tinted flavor. Harder to find than its name-brand counterpart.

Primary Effect (Lasts 4 Hours)

For the duration of the Primary Effect, the user feels euphoric, loose, happy, and ready to party. In game terms this gives the user +2 to the following Skills: Acting, Contortionist, Conversation, Dance, Human Perception, and Persuasion.

Secondary Effect (DV9)

If the user wasn't already addicted to Smash, they are now. While addicted, the user feels a loss of interest in normally enjoyable activities and has a −2 to the following Skills: Acting, Contortionist, Conversation, Dance, Human Perception, and Persuasion.

While addicted to Smash, your GM will occasionally tell you when you crave more Smash, and you should do your best to roleplay accordingly.

Scavenged Armor

Cost: 50eb (Costly)

Scavenged Armor is body or head armor with SP11. Once ablated, its SP cannot be restored by any means. At 0 SP, it falls off the wearer.

Smart Lens

Cost: 500eb (Expensive)

Takes the form of either a contact lens or a monocle worn over the eye. A Smart Lens gives a user access to a single Option Slot for a Cybereye Option.

Installing a Cybereye Option into a Smart Lens costs the same as installing it into a Cybereye, and Options requiring pairing cannot be installed. You can only wear one Smart Lens per eye.

NPC CREATION GUIDELINES

MAKE YOUR OWN NPCS!

No matter how many characters we make or stat blocks we provide, eventually every Cyberpunk RED GM reaches a point where creating new NPCs isn't just a possibility but a priority. Maybe you need unique and flavorful Mooks from a football-themed gang to throw at your Crew. Maybe the Solo PC is going out on a date and you need to know who their potential new mainline is. Maybe the Players responded positively to the street urchin you introduced as a bit of improvised plot wrangling and you want to bring them back as a recurring character.

Whatever the reason, you know there might be Skill Checks as they oppose or aid your Crew. That means the NPC needs a stat block to make them feel more alive and capable, and you want it to be something more than just a simple re-flavor of an existing Character. That's where these guidelines come in.

AND THEY ARE GUIDELINES!

We want to make this clear. The steps and numbers in this section aren't hard rules! These are guidelines to help you find your own way through the process of birthing an NPC into the Dark Future. In creating the characters in Danger Gal Dossier, we started with these guidelines but never let them hold us back from telling a story.

We promise, it won't destroy the balance of the game if you decide an NPC really needs Wardrobe and Style 6 even though you've already maxed out their Skill levels. Likewise, in most cases, if the story you want to craft or the image you want to use calls for an NPC to own bit more gear, an extra piece of Cyberware, or even a flavorful and unique weapon, don't hesitate to give it to them. You can always adjust on-the-fly in an encounter if it proves too much for your Crew to handle – the flavorful gun might run out of ammo, the high Trading Skill might receive a penalty because the Fixer is distracted by events happening in their life, etc. There's always wiggle room.

In other words, don't be afraid to bypass the guidelines to tell a story. Likewise, don't be afraid to adjust the story midstream if the game demands it. Storytelling, improvising, and midgame judgment are all parts of being a good GM, and we're giving you permission to break the rules when you feel story should trump mechanics.

NPC LEVELS

We introduced this concept in the Cyberpunk RED core rulebook (SEE CP:R PAGE 399), but it's worth going over again here. Every NPC in this book is pegged to one of four levels: Mook, Lieutenant, Mini-Boss, and Boss.

Mooks are the bottom rung of any ladder. They're of lesser skill than the average Edgerunner and usually only have a Role Rank of 2, if they have one at all. In general, you can throw a number of Mooks equal to the Crew size into a fight and expect a positive outcome for your Edgerunners. In other words: six Edgerunners, six Mooks.

Lieutenants represent enemies of equal to slightly greater skill than the average Edgerunner and often, though not always, have a Role Rank of 4. In a fight, you can comfortably pitch one Lieutenant against the Crew for every two Edgerunners present. They often lead groups of Mooks. For example, a single Lieutenant might lead a gang of four Mooks against six Edgerunners.

Mini-Bosses represent the best the opposition you can throw at the Edgerunners without the main antagonist stepping forward. They're always substantially more powerful than the average Edgerunner and always have a Role Rank. They count as three Edgerunners in a fight and usually lead a mix of Lieutenants and Mooks into battle. Against six Edgerunners, a Mini-Boss might bring a Lieutenant and a Mook to help out.

Bosses are the ultimate bad guys, usually capable of taking on an entire Edgerunning Crew by themselves or with the support of a small cadre of Mooks. Use Bosses sparingly.

HARDENING

Everything we've shared so far assumes a standard Edgerunner Crew with a mixture of combat and non-combat specialists. What happens when everyone optimizes for combat? We call that Hardening, and it requires special consideration. If you've got more Hardened than non-Hardened Edgerunners in your Crew, consider throwing some Hardened enemies into the mix. Be careful, though – Hardened Mini-Bosses and Bosses can be especially challenging for Crews not entirely Hardened themselves.

▶ Hardened Player Characters ◀

A Player Character is considered Hardened when they meet any of the following criteria:

- They possess a REF of 8 combined with an Evasion Skill of 6 or higher.
- They can attack with a STAT + Skill + Mod combination of 15 or higher.
- Their WILL + BODY is 16 or Higher.
- They own a weapon with a value of Luxury or higher.
- They have a DEX of 8 and a MOVE of 8.
- Either their Autofire or one of their Martial Arts Skills are 6 or higher.
- They're a Solo Rank 4 or higher.

▶ Hardened NPCs ◀

You may have noticed we've included several Hardened NPCs at each level (Mook, Lieutenant, Mini-Boss, and Boss) throughout Danger Gal Dossier. Use them to your cyberheart's content.

We're also including guidelines for creating your own Hardened NPCs by showing you how to boost each level via increasing Statistics and giving the Character more gear and Cyberware.

Non-Combat NPCs

We built these guidelines with fighting in mind because combat requires higher levels of fiddly number control than other types of encounters; but you can also use them for non-combat NPCs.

Want to create a Fixer who can give the Crew's negotiator a run for their money? Use the Lieutenant template. Want the Fixer to really challenge the negotiator? Use the Mini-Boss template. Want to ensure the Fixer comes out on top the way a big dog in Night City should? Use the Boss template.

Don't be afraid to ignore the combat skill recommendations if it feels right. If a high-ranking Fixer doesn't do their own dirty work, they might still be Boss level but without a need for a 16 Base Shoulder Arms since they don't do their own fighting. They've got flunkies for the job! Should a Friday Night Firefight break out, check the NPCs combat Skill Bases, and count them accordingly. For example, a Boss Fixer with Mook-level combat Skill Bases might be counted as a Mook when populating a battle encounter.

Making an NPC

We'll say it again. The NPC creation steps you're about to read should serve as a starting point for creating interesting, vibrant, and fun NPCs. Don't be afraid to go off script.

Step One

Conceptualize the NPC. The idea could be something simple, such as "a low-level member of a boostergang" or more complex, like "a former NCPD cop who experienced an epiphany about their corruption and left the force to begin making amends for the harm they've done."

If you get stuck, don't be afraid to run a Lifepath for the NPC (SEE CP:R PAGE 44). Lifepaths aren't just for Player Characters, after all!

Step Two

Decide on the level of the NPC you're creating. Are they a simple Mook? A competent Lieutenant? A skilled Mini-Boss? Or a powerful Boss? Should you Harden them?

If you only have a few optimized Edgerunners in your Crew, you'll only want to Harden Mooks and, possibly, Lieutenants.

Hardened Mini-Bosses and Bosses should be reserved for special challenges or fully combat-optimized Crews.

Step Three

Give the NPC 4 levels in their Native Language Skill and 2 levels in each of the following:

Athletics, Brawling, Concentration, Conversation, Education, Evasion, First Aid, Human Perception, Language (Streetslang), Local Expert (Your Home), Perception, Persuasion, and Stealth.

Specify Native Language and Local Expert, as those add flavor and story to the character!

Step Four

Assign the NPC's STAT and Skill point budget based on the appropriate template and calculate their derived STATs. Keep in mind the suggestions involving Hit Points, Armor Stopping Power (SP), STAT maximums, and Combat and Non-Combat Skill Base ranges. The levels you assigned in Step Three do not count for this budget. For example, all NPCs start with Athletics 2 automatically. You can use the Skill point budget to raise Athletics but you need not use it to pay for those first 2 levels. They're free of charge.

If applicable, assign the NPC a Role and Special Ability Rank, and designate any specialties within the Special Ability. NPCs do not need 4 Ranks in a Role before they multiclass into another Role.

Just like in Player Character Creation, no STAT should be lower than 2 (other than EMP) or higher than 8 (other than BODY with the right Cyberware).

NPCs rarely possess a LUCK pool; that's a benefit available specifically to Player Characters since they're the "heroes" of the story.

Step Five

Outfit the NPC by spending their gear and Cyberware budget. You need not spend the whole budget. In fact, when it comes to Cyberware, you're encouraged not to spend it all! Give the NPC the gear and chrome needed to tell their story. Don't give them stuff just to get rid of money. And if you need to spend a little extra to give them some signature gear (Rockerboys need instruments, Techs need tools, Lawmen get a loadout from their employer, and so forth)?

Go for it.

If you feel the need, drop the NPC's Empathy down by 1 for every five pieces of Cyberware implanted. As with everything in NPC creation, this is a guideline and not a rule. If you believe their Empathy to be fine where it is, leave it be.

Mooks and Lieutenants have suggested restrictions regarding weapons but, again, ignore them if it makes sense.

Step Six

One last time: These are guidelines, not rules. Perform any tweaks to build the NPC you imagined. Go ahead. We won't tell anyone.

NPC Templates

Mook

A MISSION FOR CYBERPUNK RED

This Mission uses the Beat Chart system (SEE CP:R PAGE 395) to pace and focus story flow. It breaks down into Background (read aloud text designed to set the mood), The Rest of the Story (a summary of the Mission for the GM), The Setting (a summary of important locations in the Mission), The Opposition (a summary of potential enemies), and The Hook (a guide to getting the Crew into the Mission) all followed by a series of Developments (non-action Beats, labeled as Dev in the header) and Cliffhangers (action Beats, labeled as Cliff in the header). It eventually leads to a Climax (the big finale) and a Resolution (the wrap-up). In addition, this Mission contains two Optional Cliffhangers (labeled OpCliff) to be used at your discretion.

BACKGROUND (READ ALOUD)

DATA

For more information about the Forlorn Hope SEE CP:R PAGE 313.

It's a typical night at the Forlorn Hope – desultory, intermittent fights outside, a smog of cigarette smoke and flavored vape fumes inside. Your Fixer has a preem job for you, with an exceptional client. "Very hush-hush," they said, "go up to the bar and wait."

DATA

For more information about Mouse and the Danger Gal Puma Squad SEE PAGE 27.

Mouse flashes her trademark playful smile at you all, then waves for you to sit down.

"We have business to discuss," she says. "Drinks are on Michiko Sanderson, so order what you want."

THE REST OF THE STORY

His name is Darius, and he works for Arasaka as an undercover operative in Night City. But he didn't hire a crew of scrub Edgerunners and infiltrate Danger Gal HQ on business. Instead, he hoped to find information about his parents, who went missing during the 4th Corporate War. Unfortunately, things didn't go as planned. While Darius and his bodyguard, Nymph, escaped, two of his hired crew died, and two others sank into comas.

Now, Darius and Nymph are hiding out in the tunnels beneath Night City, waiting for the heat to die down. Meanwhile, Michiko Sanderson, CEO of Danger Gal, wants answers, and she's empowered Mouse to hire the Crew to get them.

THE SETTING

The story begins in the Forlorn Hope, an Edgerunner bar with a long and storied history. From there, the Crew travels to Old Japantown, a dying district where the few remaining residents attempt to hold onto their homes as gang conflicts roar about them. Their destination in Old Japantown is Mrs. Suzuki's bodega: a rare oasis of order in the chaos of a Combat Zone. Finally, they'll journey beneath Night City into a warren of abandoned tunnels, stations, and basements claimed by those who don't fit into topside life. In the darkness, the Crew will find their prey.

THE OPPOSITION

- The Maelstrom is looking to expand its operations into Old Japantown, and the Crew might be there when a small group of chromed-up Mooks attack Mrs. Suzuki's bodega.
- While they aren't there as combatants, the Bozos presence might be felt in a form of a trap left behind.
- The Crew's primary goal is locating Darius, an Arasaka operative working undercover in Night City, and his bodyguard Nymph.

THE HOOK

Mouse offers the Edgerunners a "small job" (her words) for 1,000eb per person. She'll hand over 500eb as an advance, with the rest handed over on mission completion. Once they take the money, she'll consider them to have accepted the job and under a non-disclosure agreement. Until they agree, all she'll say is the job should be primarily investigative, but she can't rule out combat.

If the Crew accepts, Mouse slides a set of preloaded chops (aka credchips) across the table to them. Checking them proves they do, in fact, contain 500 Eurobucks each. Mouse then begins the briefing.

There has been an incident of some note at Danger Gal HQ – some rather enterprising choombas decided to test their luck and break into the building. Unfortunately, they did so while a few members of Puma Squad were present, and were promptly stopped dead in their tracks (emphasis on dead).

Now they have a crew of infiltrators to ID, but it is the middle of the busy season for the investigation NeoCorp. Moreover, Puma Squad, Danger Gal's premiere crew, has a big job of their own coming up. All this means they must farm the work to a competent crew capable of investigation. That'd be the Player Characters. Luckily, the right people are vouching for them.

The job: Find out who the infiltration crew was, track down the escaped members, discover anything possible about their motivations, and – if possible – deal with the remaining infiltrators. Mouse would prefer them alive (dead people can't answer questions) but understands that sometimes bullets speak before words have the chance to.

GO TO DEV (MOUSE'S STORY)

DEV (MOUSE'S STORY)

With the job accepted and some money advanced, Mouse leads the Crew towards the back of the Forlorn Hope.

"I'll bring the glass back!" Mouse shouts to the bartender before using her uninjured shoulder to push through the back door and into a large alley behind the building. There's a large, unmarked box truck parked there, with a refrigeration unit installed. As Mouse approaches, the rear door rolls up. Waves of cold air roll dramatically out of the truck's cargo compartment. Inside, the Crew can see two corpses strapped to tables and a series of lockers attached to the wall.

"Welcome to Danger Gal's covert mobile crime lab." Mouse says, "Let me run through the details of what happened, then you can poke at the bodies and their belongings."

The Brownout

The infiltration happened at 02:47 the previous night. Mouse and Pantera were staying up late to binge-watch the latest season of The Elflines Online Chronicles in the archive room when the power flickered. Such brownouts are not uncommon, even in the swankier parts of Night City, as demand often outstrips supply in the Time of the Red. The backup power generators immediately kicked in and then turned off when the city power resumed less than a minute later.

The Virtual Inspection

Pantera began a sweep of the HQ's NET Architecture, as per protocol. Neither Mouse nor Pantera thought this was worth waking the rest of the Puma Squad for, something which Mouse says she regrets. During her virtual sweep, Pantera noticed an oddity on one of the cameras near the archive room. Usually, the security cameras do a slow pan of a specific area, back and forth, but one appeared to be jammed and pointing at a fixed spot. The two of them, therefore, moved toward the archive room exit to inspect the camera and lodge a repair request if needed.

The Firefight

As they attempted to leave the archive room, all hell broke loose. The two Puma Squad operatives ran straight into a team of six people trying to enter the room. A brief exchange of fire took place. Initially outnumbered and outgunned, the infiltrators wounded Pantera and broke Mouse's arm (and, more importantly, ruined her jacket!).

Mouse dragged Pantera into the records room and forced the door closed. Fighting nausea, but still plugged into the NET Architecture, Pantera activated the fire-suppression system for the area outside the archive room, flooding it with carbon dioxide gas. Meant to starve fires of oxygen, it had the same effect on the infiltrators.

The Escape

Outside the archive room, Mouse and Pantera heard the sounds of high-velocity gunfire and breaking glass. By this point, the entire building was on alert; another member of Puma Squad, Tigress, watched through her scope as two of the infiltrators rappelled down to the street and vanished into an alleyway.

The Aftermath

Further investigation suggests the two escaped infiltrators dropped down a maintenance hole into the city's storm drains and vanished in the warrens. Two were found dead, and two others were in comas due to oxygen starvation. The jammed camera noticed by Pantera appeared to have been sabotaged with quick-setting spray foamcrete, available from any hardware Vendit. This is a common street-level hack to prevent security cameras from focusing on, say, a Netrunner jacking into NET Architecture.

Mouse will answer questions as honestly as possible, with two exceptions.

First, she dodges questions about why she and Pantera chose to binge a vidshow series in the archive room, instead of their preem and cushy quarters (though a Human Perception Check against DV 15 will spot a blush on her cheeks).

Second, she doesn't want to discuss how the infiltrators may have caused the power outage, replying with, "That's not information we're willing to share with someone outside Danger Gal. Someone might try to repeat the tactic before we seal the security hole. You understand."

In either case, she doesn't think it has anything to do with the Crew's main priority: investigating the infiltrators and figuring out their motivations and any potential backers.

Once she's done with the story (and her drink), Mouse wishes the Crew luck.

"Check the bodies for clues," Mouse says, "Keep them intact, please. There's only the corpses here. The other two need medical attention back at Danger Gal HQ and are off-limits. If they wake up and spout any useful data, I'll send word.

"You'll find the stuff they were carrying in the lockers. Each locker has a picture of a perp so you know what belongs to who. Take pics, and leave the items. They're now DGD property. I'm going to go grab a second one of these fab appletinis and get back to work. Let the driver know when you're done, and they'll bring the truck home."

GO TO CLIFF (FINDING CLUES)

CLIFF (FINDING CLUES)

With Mouse gone, the Crew can begin investigating. Here's what they can find.

Body #1 belongs to a twenty-something man with a blue mohawk. No markings indicating he belongs to a gang or other group. Visible cyberware includes a neural link and chipware socket. It looks like someone exploded his chest. Probably autofire.

Body #2 was a late teens/early twenties man with green hair. He was shot, through and through, in the gut. Like Body #1, no markings. He has two oversized cybereyes replacing his meat orbs.

In the locker marked Body #1: a hammer (heavy melee weapon), assault rifle, cell phone, a light armor jack, bloody generic chic clothing, and a flashlight. In the locker marked Body #2: a very heavy pistol, a cell phone, a metal token/coin, bloody generic leisurewear clothing (well worn), and a radio scanner/music player loaded with pop hits.

BODY #1

BODY #2

PATIENT #1

PATIENT #2

20s-something man with cybereyes identical to those installed in Body #2. Inside is a shotgun, a Kevlar® helmet and jacket, some leisurewear clothing (well worn), a metal token/coin, and a cell phone.

With the visual exam of the bodies and belongings finished, the Crew can start looking for clues.

- A DV 13 Criminology or Paramedic Check is all an Edgerunner needs to determine the most likely cause of death for both men was massive trauma due to a lead injection.
- Identifying Body #1 requires a DV 21 Streetwise Check. His handle is Mallard, and he's a low-stakes Fixer of no particular importance. Identifying Patient #1 requires a DV 17 Streetwise Check. She's Capo, a roller derby player who recently made a singing career debut with the Razor Squad, a small-time local band. Identifying Body #2 or Patient #2 is impossible.
- Searching the Data Pool for image matches requires a DV 17 Library Search Check (DV 13 if Capo was identified). Success finds Capo's Garden Patch, showing photos of her in action on the roller derby track and with the Razor Squad. One photo shows her cuddled up to Patient #2. He isn't identified, but she added a nonsense tag to the photo: shroomerboi.
- Body #1's cyberware is bog standard. Body #2's cybereyes are unusual. With a DV 15 Cybertech Check, an Edgerunner can identify it as specifically tuned for long-term dark dwelling.
- Using an appropriate Skill (Science [Biochemistry], for example) with a DV 15, an Edgerunner can identify some organic matter trapped under the fingernails of Body #2 as being the remains of a high-end edible mushroom.
- Except for the tokens possessed by Body #2 and Patient #2, all the gear is bog standard and of poor quality. Mostly 3D-Printed or bought at some random bodega, vendit, or Oasis. Breaking past the four-digit passcode on the cellphones requires a DV 13 Electronics/Security Tech Check. Each has five numbers programmed into them. Three of the numbers belong to the other phones present. The remaining two are identical on all four phones. If dialed, the numbers go to an out-of-service message. Obvious burner phones.
- The tokens are brass discs the size and shape of an old-school, antique Night City Area Rapid Transit token, with a mushroom symbol stamped into it.

It requires a DV 13 Deduction, Streetwise, or Library Search Check to piece together the clues and see they lead to an underground (literally) group known as the Shroomers known for growing (you guessed it!) high-quality mushrooms. Their turf isn't marked on any map, and there's only one place to grab Shroomer food outside of random Night Markets: Mrs. Suzuki's Gourmet Bodega in Old Japantown. In fact, the bodega advertises it on its Garden Patch – "100% Shroomer-Grown Lichen Desserts! Night City Delicacy!" Since they advertise publicly, no Check is needed to find Mrs. Suzuki's Bodega via the Data Pool.

If the Crew can't piece together the clues, Mouse will return and tell them one of Danger Gal's analysts identified the token as coming from the Shroomers and suggests they check out Mrs. Suzuki's Bodega.

GO TO DEV (THE BODEGA)

DEV (THE BODEGA)

Mrs. Suzuki's bodega is snuggled in the heart of what remains of Old Japantown's original community, near Crisis Medical Center. What little traffic there is in the district is currently rerouting around a clash between the Tyger Claws and the Maelstrom to the east. The sound of gunfire and explosions can be heard several blocks away.

DATA

Need to know more about Old Japantown? SEE CP:R PAGE 299.

The bodega is clean and well-lit. There are absolutely no frills regarding how the goods are displayed, but everything has its place on shelves or in the large wire racks lining the walls. Near the door, a little plastic statuette of a calico cat waves its paw for good luck, and a young man stands near the checkout kiosks.

DATA

For more information on Bodegas SEE CP:R PAGE 332.

Meet Benedict Suzuki: Benny, for short. He looks up from his tablet as the Crew comes in, but armed choombas coming in for late-night groceries are very much his day-to-day. "Hi," he says, "can I help you?" He looks to be in his very early 20s, and is wearing a Night City University hoodie with a Heavy Pistol holstered over it in a shoulder rig.

About Mrs. Suzuki

Mrs. Suzuki is the third Mrs. Suzuki in her large extended family to run their little chain of bodegas which cater to Night City inhabitants looking for Japanese food and cooking ingredients. Once a month, she and her relatives pool their resources to open a Night Market in one of Old Japantown's shuttered, big-box stores.

Her regular monthly income has doubled since making her deal with the Shroomers.

At this point, most of her family works in stores in the Watson Development but she personally maintains the original Bodega in Old Japantown out of sentiment.

If asked about Mrs. Suzuki, he raises an eyebrow. "Sorry," he says, "My aunt is busy. Is this important?" Benny is not seeking to stop the Edgerunners; he just doesn't want to get scolded if he bothers her when she's working. This will be evident with a DV 13 Human Perception Check. He can be persuaded to contact her by anyone who succeeds by a DV 13 Check using an appropriate social Skill.

Once convinced, he calls her on his Agent, has a brief conversation in Japanese, then motions to a door on the far side of the shop. "Past there," he says as the door thunks and unlocks. "Be polite."

Beyond is a narrow corridor with three doors, two on the left and one at the far end. The second door on the left is open, and a voice calls for them to enter.

The office past the entrance is filled with boxes containing canned goods, plastic-wrapped packets, and earthy-scented mushrooms. A middle-aged woman of Japanese descent sits on a sagging couch near the back, a shotgun perched across her lap.

"Hi," Mrs. Suzuki says, as though she's greeting regular customers. "I'm Mrs. Suzuki. You wanted to speak to me?" She pronounces her name as if it is a title – as if she could be the only Mrs. Suzuki worth knowing. She is small, plump, and aggressively pleasant in her floral blouse and loose, floaty slacks.

Mrs. Suzuki is polite but protective of her connection to the Shroomers. She doesn't want trouble to come down on her mushroom source. Nor does she want another Fixer muscling in on her territory. Hence, reluctant to answer questions about the underground group.

Convincing Mrs. Suzuki to talk will require some negotiating and three Checks with an appropriate Social Skill, each against DV 13. If the Crew succeeds, she's willing to share.

"I don't know any of these choombas," Mrs. Suzuki will say, "but those are Shroomer tokens for sure. Tell you what, I'm meeting with my Shroomer contacts here two nights from now. Come back then and I'll introduce you."

Optionally, a Netrunner can try to break into the Bodega's NET Architecture (SEE PAGE 164). Inside, they might find Mrs. Suzuki's schedule, including the meeting with the Shroomers two nights hence.

If the Crew succeeds, GO TO DEV (MEET THE SHROOMERS)

If the Crew fails to convince Mrs. Suzuki after six Checks or if you just want to add a little action to your session, GO TO OPCLIFF (BODEGA BLOWOUT).

OPCLIFF (BODEGA BLOWOUT)

The sound of gunshots whickering into the storefront rings out from the bodega. Immediately after, there's the sound of security shutters slamming down, a howl of agony, and a garbled message from Mrs. Suzuki's Agent. "... shot..." is all that can be heard through the noise.

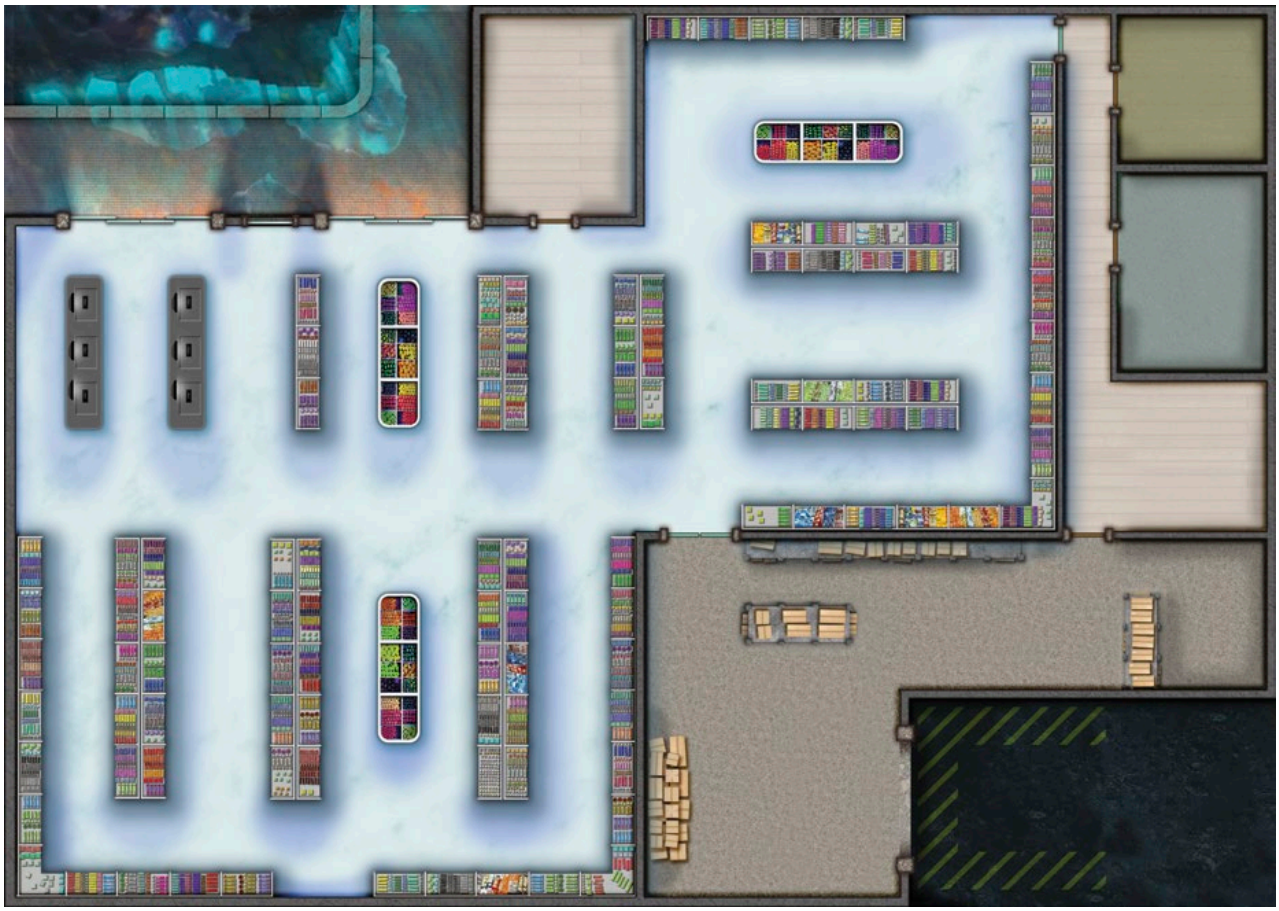

Mrs. Suzuki instructs her Agent to call her family for backup even as she rises, shotgun in hand.

"Help me defend my store, and I'll reward you!" Mrs. Suzuki shouts as she hurries out.

The scene on the bodega floor is somewhat frantic – Benny, who is bleeding, has brought the steel security shutters down over the front of the shop.

They have slammed down with all their weight upon one of the attackers, a low-level Maelstrom ganger, who is quite messily dead.

Mrs. Suzuki points to the shutters and shouts, "You know what to do!" while she attends to Benny's wound.

The shutters explode open, as if on cue. The firefight begins. Maelstrom gang members, equal in number to the Crew, stream in and engage. Use the stats for various Maelstrom Mooks (SEE PAGES 75 THROUGH 78) to represent the enemy. Mrs. Suzuki prioritizes treating Benny. If she needs to join the fight, use the stats for a Security Operative (SEE CP:R PAGE 413; Replace the PQ Assault Rifle with a Shotgun).

If the Characters are in danger of being overwhelmed by their opponents, remember Mrs. Suzuki summoned her family members using her Agent; they should show up in time to help clean up troublesome mooks. Even if they aren't needed for backup, once the attackers are all incapacitated, members of the Suzuki family arrive for mop up and recovery.

Once the battle ends, Mrs. Suzuki wanders over to the Crew.

"We normally have Tyger Claws protection, but they're run thin with Maelstrom muscling into the area to scav for tech. Guess the ones near my bodega got drawn up to the big fight to the east and missed this little raiding party. You saved our hides. I said I'd reward you. Grab a shopping basket full of Prepak and drink."

That's enough food to reduce each Edgerunner's next Lifestyle payment (SEE CP:R PAGE 377) by 50eb.

If the Crew didn't convince Mrs. Suzuki to share information earlier, she does so now, inviting them back in two nights for an introduction to the Shroomer.

GO TO DEV (MEET THE SHROOMERS)

DEV (MEET THE SHROOMERS)

The Crew has time to relax, restock, and recover. If they contact Mouse about their progress, she briefly replies, "Sounds good, let me know when you know more."

Upon returning two nights later, the Edgerunners notice a small cadre of Tyger Claws hanging out in a parking lot across the street from the bodega, all armed and watchful. The area seems as peaceful as any inside a Combat Zone can be.

If the Crew is on friendly terms with Mrs. Suzuki, Benny offers a warm hello and places a call to Mrs. Suzuki. The door unlocks, and he directs them in. Otherwise, they'll need to succeed at a DV 15 Check with an appropriate Social Skill to convince him to call with his aunt. The good news is the Shroomers are interested in meeting them and will ask Mrs. Suzuki to let the Crew in. They're starting to worry about their missing kin and are willing to entertain strangers for more information.

Sitting on the couch, this time, are three people: Mrs. Suzuki and two pale-skinned folk. They are in the middle of weighing out a collection of mushrooms on a scale. It almost looks like a drug deal in action.

Mrs. Suzuki says. "These are my Shroomer contacts. Pa. May. These are the folks who were asking about you."

The two, older and pale-skinned, introduce themselves.

"Pa Saddlefoot," one of the Shroomers says, taciturn. His voice sounds rusty, as though he doesn't usually talk much, and he looks to be anywhere from 60 to 80. It's hard to tell.

"And I'm May," the other one says. Curled, gray hair frizzes gently out of her utilitarian cap to straggle onto her slight shoulders, and she appears to be in her 50s or 60s. Both of them have obvious cybereye replacements almost identical to those on Body #2 and Patient #2.

"What do you outsiders want, not meaning to be rude? We prefer to keep to ourselves." May continues.

If shown the photos of the tokens, May and Pa Saddlefoot confirm them as Shroomer in design, although they cannot vouch for their authenticity. "We put chips in them," Pa Saddlefoot says, "so they're a pass token, not just a piece of brass. Not that we'd be able to test it without the tokens in hand." He jabs his chin at the Edgerunner who shows them the image on their Agent. "Where'd you find those?"

Upon seeing the dead and unconscious infiltrators' pictures, Pa and May avert their eyes. Pa Saddlefoot reaches into his faded denim jacket for a handkerchief and wipes away a few tears.

"It's them," May says. "We told them not to take the job, but they wanted the topside life and the flash." She explains further. "The boys – they're nicknamed Bloodhound and Bugout. Bloodhound, the one on the table, is Pa's grandson. Bugout's my nephew. Bugout was seeing the woman in those photos, Capo – she's a topsider. And the other dead man, that's one of Capo's friends, Mallard. They brought nothing good with them." May's voice is full of blame.

"Enough of that," Pa Saddlefoot interjects. "It wasn't her who put ideas in Bugout's head. He'd seen enough of the outside to like it in his wander-year." The old man looks hurt but undaunted.

With a DV 13 Human Perception Check, the Crew can tell the Saddlefoots are holding something back. It isn't hard to convince them to share using a DV 13 Check using an appropriate social Skill.

"We keep an eye on people using the storm drains and tunnels in the rest of the city, lest they wander into our squats." May says. "Early morning of the day you say those photos were taken, a couple of folks came through an old entrance into an abandoned tunnel. We don't use it no more on account of it flooding part of the year, but it's dry right now and they've set up a little hideout there. One of our trackers peeked in and says he saw those folks talking to Bloodhound and Bugout topside last week, while on a supply run."

"We hate to be beholden to others," Pa Saddlefoot says, "but something tells us tangling with them direct is opening ourselves up to more trouble. You want them. We want them gone. Seems our interests align."

"Come on back with us." May agrees, "We'll help you finish your job."

Pa and May escort the Crew to an abandoned tunnel entrance not far from the bodega. They push open a creaky door and leads the way down a long, dark, sloping tunnel into the underside of Night City.

GO TO OPCLIFF (BOZO TRAP)

OR TO DEV (SHROOMER VILLAGE)

OPCLIFF (BOZO TRAP)

Include this Optional Cliffhanger if you feel your Crew needs a small action break, if you want to foreshadow future Bozo-related events, or if you just want to showcase the random chaos that is Night City.

DATA

NCART is the Night City Area Rapid Transit Corporation. For more info SEE CP:R PAGE 303.

DATA

To learn more about the Bozos SEE PAGE 15.

As the Shroomers lead the Crew down the stairs, ask for a DV 17 Perception Check from the Edgerunners. May and Pa can also make the Check (with a Perception Base of 12). If a Crew member doesn't have a way to counter the darkness (May and Pa have cybereyes with Low Light/Infrared/UV) impose a -1 penalty to their Check due to the poor lighting conditions.

With a success, someone spots the trap. An unknown party has rigged goo sprayers into the tunnel's broken fire suppression system, creating a makeshift Slip-floor environmental defense (SEE CP:R PAGE 375). Deactivating the trap requires a DV 13 Electronics/Security Tech Check.

Failure to spot the trap means it triggers. Everyone must succeed at a DV 15 Athletics Check or slip and fall prone. This includes Pa and May, using an Athletics Base of 10. Falling causes no damage but covers the Character in a glowing, white substance they can only remove by spending a minute scrubbing themselves clean using a 10eb solvent – one the Shroomers don't have on hand.

"Bozos," May grunts. "Those damn chaos clowns love trapping our tunnel entrances. We're lucky it was just paint this time."

GO TO DEV (SHROOMER VILLAGE)

DEV (SHROOMER VILLAGE)

At the end of the passageway is a blast door built from parts of a subway train. Pa Saddlefoot uses his token to open it. Beyond lies a checkpoint with armed Shroomers guarding it. They nod respectfully to Pa Saddlefoot and May, but do not admit them until a password is given, at which point the entire group enters into a cavernous space excavated out of Night City's subterranean layers and shored up with concrete. In the old days, this was a maintenance depot for the NCART subway system, but the city cut off this entire loop of the subway from the rest of the line due to instability caused by the Arasaka Tower nuke of 2023 (SEE CP:R PAGE 292).

In the intervening decades, the Shroomers moved in, transforming the space into a small farming settlement. Large racks, welded together from scrap, hold trays of substrate and mycelium, where mushrooms in various stages of maturity grow. Scattered between the racks, large chunks of fallen concrete debris serve as makeshift garden beds for some sort of pale lichen under jury-rigged grow lamps.

Several train cars serve as shells for housing. Markings indicate others repurposed for various needs, including a bathhouse, lavatory, and tech workshop. Overall, the lighting is dim – just enough to see by but troublesome for anyone without some way to perceive a world shrouded in underground murk.

"I'll scare up a meal," May says, insistent on proper hospitality.

The Crew is invited to a scavenged plastic picnic table with matching benches. Pa Saddlefoot pulls up a stool to join them and make polite conversation. He won't talk much about Shroomer business directly but mention how the new lichen crop seems to be coming in well.

When May returns, it's with a large, bubbling cook pot atop a cart, hand-hammered bowls and cups, and utensils to serve the food with. There's also a tall jug of home-brewed mushroom beer for those who wish to partake, and kombucha for teetotalers. The stew, when ladled out, appears to be rich with mushrooms and thickened with lichen, with cubes of spiced SCOP thrown in for flavor.

This might be the first taste some of the Edgerunners have had of real, grown food instead of kibble and Prepak, so feel free to emphasize just how good this meal tastes. The savory flavors of the mushroom, the subtle texture of the lichens, and the greasy

The Unexpected

We've only got so many pages to share this Mission, so we can't cover every possible course of action. For example, the Players might decide to muscle their way into the meeting or they might stay outside and follow the Shroomers when they leave.

Remember, part of your job as GM is to keep the story moving forward. This might mean making up some DVs and results on the fly: a DV 13 to shove open a locked door or a DV 15 to tail some paranoid Shroomers without being noticed, followed by some fast Checks with social Skills to talk their way past the checkpoint guards.

Don't panic if your Players go "off the rails". Improvisation is part of the game and we believe you can do it! It is also alright if they fail. Not all Missions go smoothly.

savor of canned SCOP are all balanced in a rich, thick gravy. It's no wonder Mrs. Suzuki goes to such lengths to keep the Shroomers as suppliers.

Once everyone has been sufficiently fed, Pa Saddlefoot lays the deal out for the characters. "As promised, we'll lead you to the folks you're after. I'll be sending Sweetbriar, specifically, to do it. She's my granddaughter and one of the best tunnel sweepers we got. She'll take you to the outsiders' hideout. I'd let her fight alongside you, but we just lost one, maybe two, of our own. My heart couldn't take losing another."

He summons a short, solid-looking woman with brown hair in curly brown ringlets. This is Sweetbriar and she comes complete with a crossbow and a serious disposition.

Sweetbriar promises to obey her elders and not engage in combat. Once the Crew is ready, she leads them to a battery-driven rail cart. Along the way, she lays out a plan.

"There's a water main running close to the storm drain the outsiders are hiding in. Since I'm not gonna be in the fight, I'll go up and breach the mains, divert most of that water flow into the hidey hole, and flush them out. Least that way, you avoid any traps they've laid, and I do something to help avenge my brother."

GO TO CLIMAX (TUNNEL FIGHT)

CLIMAX (TUNNEL FIGHT)

Sweetbriar starts the cart and pilots it through the tunnels. Edgerunners without night vision spend this entire trip listening to the soft whirr and creak of the rail cart and whatever little conversation takes place. Those who can see in the dark are treated to a monotonous repetition of tunnels and switchbacks for what feels like hours until the cart comes to a halt.

"Off the cart, now, and watch your feet," Sweetbriar murmurs. "Follow me. We're under Little Europe."

The Shroomer leads them through another secret door that leads into a half-collapsed, somewhat stabilized maintenance worker shaft and then roughly 300 m/yds further into an abandoned tunnel full of rusted old rail cars.

"Their hideout is past that choke-point," Sweetbriar says, pointing into the darkness. "They walled off the other junctions for defense, so once I flood their hideout, there's nowhere else for the water to go but there. Arm up and get ready. I gotta take another route to hit the main."

With that, the Crew is left to wait. There's plenty of time to find an advantageous position. A minute passes. Then five. Then there's a heavy crumpling sound that builds into a roar and, immediately after, the distant sounds of swearing and splashing.

Sweetbriar made good on her promise. Flushed out of their hideout is a pair of sodden, angry figures, albeit well-armed. The characters now face Darius (SEE PAGE 165) and his bodyguard, Nymph (SEE PAGE 166). Note that the water stops flowing almost immediately, making the area slippery but not impacting the fight directly. Darius and Nymph are equipped for the low light conditions, but anyone in the Crew who isn't suffers a -1 penalty to any relevant Checks made during the battle. Anyone marked by glow paint in OPCLIFF (BOZO TRAP) makes for an easier target, granting a +1 to opponents making an Attack Check against them.

As a bodyguard, Nymph takes the lead, with Darius behind her and providing backup and support.

If the fight feels too easy for the Crew, feel free to add a Mook or three to Darius' entourage. These are local hires, clueless about what they're doing other than collecting Eurobucks from some Corp and his bodyguard. If it seems the Crew is having trouble winning the fight, feel free to have Sweetbriar break her promise to her grandfather and join the battle. Use the Road Ganger stat block (SEE CP:R PAGE 413; Replace Leather Armor with Kevlar, remove the Very Heavy Pistol and Ammo, and give Cybereyes x2 w/ Low Light/Infrared/UV x2). She'll fight smart, staying back to provide cover and support while the Crew takes on the duo. She'll focus more on Complimentary Skill Checks than direct Attacks.

GO TO RESOLUTION (JOB DONE)

RESOLUTION (JOB DONE)

Nymph is a professional with no wish to die; she tries to escape or surrenders if things turn south. Darius will try to bluff his way out by telling the truth: shouting he just wanted to find his parents and he believes Danger Gal is responsible for their disappearance. It'll be his Persuasion versus the Crew's Human Perception for them to suss out he isn't telling the whole truth there.

If it seems he'll be captured, remember Darius is an Arasaka loyalist. He'll activate his cortex bomb, dying instantly – there's no chance of saving him.

The undercover operative leaves no sign of his Corporate allegiance on his person. However, a printed photograph is in his pocket: a boy being embraced lovingly by an older man and woman, all obviously related. On the back, it reads "Mom, Dad, and Me. 1 August 2020." in Japanese.

Nymph knows she was working for Arasaka but little else; Darius handled all contact with their handlers. She, unfortunately, has little to offer in exchange for her freedom but tries to bargain, promising she'll owe the Crew a favor if they release her.

Investigating the water-logged hideout of the duo, the Crew finds a motley assortment of now-useless items, such as a pair of soggy sleeping bags, some inedible ration packs, and sewage-soaked clothing. With a DV 13 Perception Check, they find a little cardboard rectangle – a corporate calling card of the sort handed out ritualistically at the beginning of business meetings. Embossed on the expensive plastic is a Corporate logo that any Night City resident would recognize instantly: the Arasaka trifoliate. The card bears no name or title but does have a coded data thread woven into it. Cracking the data thread requires hardware and time the Crew doesn't possess.

DATA

If you need more data on Arasaka SEE CP:R PAGE 267.

Darius' Cyberdeck holds nothing more than programs – no data files. He got nothing from the Danger Gal HQ archive room servers before being forced to flee.

Assuming Sweetbriar returns home alive, the Crew befriends the Shroomers and is sent away with a fresh crate of mushrooms and lichen (a 100eb value).

"If you need to talk to us, send word to Mrs. Suzuki. We'll be glad to hear you out."

When contacted, Mouse insists the Crew say nothing over their Agents and asks them to meet her at Danger Gal HQ. From the lobby, she draws them into a second-floor meeting room and listens to their report. If the Crew is towing Nymph along, Mouse has guards escort her to a holding cell.

Once Mouse receives the report and examines the business card, she uses an encrypted connection to murmur a coded message in a hard voice. Then she puts her practiced cheerful performance face back on.

"I need you to give me anything you recovered from the infiltrators or their hideout, no matter how trivial it seems," Mouse says. "We need to examine everything."

Anyone trying to hold something back must succeed on a Persuasion Check against Mouse's Human Perception (SEE PAGE 31). Should the Crew wish to negotiate, have them make the appropriate Skill Checks against Mouse. If they fail, she'll pay them 100eb each for the items. If they succeed, she'll give them an additional 500eb each.

Finally, Mouse offers the Crew congratulations and a promise of future work, should the need arise. While escorting them out of the building, she hands them one last gift – an envelope. Inside is a Danger Gal Puma Squad foil trading card, showing the entire team in a group shot. It is signed by each squad member, making it worth 1,000eb to the right collector.

"That's from Mrs. Sanderson," Mouse says with a wink. "For a job well done."

CONTINUING ON

What information was contained in the data thread woven into the Arasaka business card? What was Darius up to in Night City on behalf of his employer? What happened to his parents? Consider these plot hooks to pick up on and design future missions around. Danger Gal will certainly be asking those questions and, as the Crew has proven themselves useful and reliable allies, they might be brought in on any operation to find the answers.

DARIUS

Undercover Arasaka Operative

Darius has always been a person leading several lives. The son of a British-Persian father and a Japanese mother, he split his time between London and Chiba depending on which set of relatives he was living with while his parents worked their high-echelon Corp jobs. His parents would come back to visit, look over his grades at Corp programming school, reward him richly for doing well, and then disappear again.

Darius' parents vanished for good the year he turned seventeen, while on assignment in Night City during the Fourth Corporate War, and it was only then that he realized he loved and valued them. In the aftermath of the war, he signed up with Arasaka in Japan and worked his way up the ranks, hoping to discover what happened to them.

Darius found some information indicating his parents survived the war, but little else besides. Knowing Danger Gal was tracking Arasaka operatives in North America, he volunteered for an infiltration assignment to Night City in the hopes of discovering more in the NeoCorp's archives.

It goes without saying that Darius is a true believer at this point. Arasaka isn't just his corporate affiliation — it is his surrogate family. Over the years, he's built up a fantasy of his parents as heroic Arasaka loyalists who performed remarkable feats and he's sure Michiko Sanderson, as a traitor to the Arasaka family, had something to do with their disappearance.

NYMPH

Soul-Dead Bodyguard

Nymph was once a member of the Hong Kong Flying Tigers SDU – unfortunately, she was away on a cross-training assignment when her home city was reduced to an uninhabitable wasteland by a bioterror attack. The casualties included Nymph's husband, children, and extended family. In the wake of such sorrow, she lost all sense of meaning and duty. She vanished, only to resurface several years later working as muscle for the highest Corporate bidder.

At some point in her freelance career, Arasaka took an interest in her abilities, and now she works for them full-time as Darius' undercover partner. Nymph came by her street handle not because of how she resembles the mythical being in grace and beauty, but due to how thoroughly a dragonfly nymph murders its way through life to survive. That's what she does also, if she's ordered to.

Nymph is not a true believer in Arasaka's corporate superiority, like Darius is. Still, she is fully willing to carry out the dirty work required to build them a new foothold in Night City, if only because she stopped caring about things like integrity and morality a long time ago.

This indifference may be a weakness – if she doesn't care about Arasaka that much, then maybe she's not willing to die for them, either.

COMBAT ZONE™

In the time of the Red, every city has a combat zone: an area of the city where the law doesn't reach and cyber-enhanced gangs vie for control over the streets.

Cyberpunk Red: Combat Zone is an exciting new skirmish miniatures game from Monster Fight Club, set in the Combat Zones of 2045's cities.

Lead a team of Cyberpunk characters looking to make a name for themselves!

Combat Zone features a new, fast-paced game engine that where the players can act and react in organic, free-flowing actions. No rounds, no phases - the game just goes. As your characters take hits and get wounded, their abilities degrade - so strike hard and strike fast!

Combat Zone leaves the traditional rulers and tape measure behind and introduces a new "Limiter" based movement and range system, where your characters' attacks and movement depend on the quality of their actions. Green, Yellow, and Red Actions all have different chances to succeed - so choose smartly!

DANGER gal DOSSIER

In the Dark Future, data is power, and no one owns more data than Danger Gal, Night City's premiere investigation and security NeoCorp. Run by Michiko Sanderson (née Araska – yes, that Arasaka!), Danger Gal's archives contain information on everything and everyone worth knowing.

And lucky you, choomba, we've prepared a copy of those archives for download straight into your Cyberpunk RED game. Inside Danger Gal Dossier you'll find information on Mooks, Lieutenants, Mini-Bosses, and Bosses – of both the standard and hardened varieties. You'll learn about the factions of Night City, from Edgerunning Crews and Nomad Packs to Boostergangers and elite Trauma Team squads.

And when the plethora of NPCs we're giving you in Danger Gal Dossier isn't enough, you'll find the guidelines you need to bring your own Night City denizens to life.

Danger Gal Dossier includes…

- Lore and details on fifteen of Night City's factions, including the NCPD, Maelstrom, Tyger Claws, Trauma Team, 6th Street, and the Bozos.
- Stats and biographies on over 100 NPCs, ranging from newly inducted gang members to powerful cyberpsychos ready to rip up The Street.
- Guidelines for creating your own NPCs, of any power level, from Mook to Hardened Boss.
- A new mission set in Night City featuring the one-and-only Danger Gal and a mysterious second faction. Want to know more? Play to find out!
